Perfects First Steps to Appeal on Eve of His Transfer.

Says Jury's Sentiment for Them Swayed Its Judgment.

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 15 (AP).—Bruno Richard Hauptmann swore his innocence anew and perfected the first step for an appeal late today, on the eve of his removal to a cell in the State's Prison at Trenton six steps from the death chamber.

Hauptmann was restless awaiting removal to State Prison tomorrow about daylight. Sheriff John H. Curtiss said he and State troopers will convoy him in a fleet of closed automobiles, but declined to discuss other details.

The convicted kidnaper-slayer of the Lindbergh baby signed the first papers in preparation for his appeal, Associate Defense Counsel G. Lloyd Fisher announced.

Asks Jersey Pay Costs.

The document set forth he was a pauper and requested that the State of New Jersey pay the costs of the record of the trial. Fisher attempted to obtain an appointment Monday with Justice Thomas W. Trenchard, the trial judge, to ask him to sign the order, a discretionary procedure.

The next step, he said, will be to obtain a writ of error from the Court of Errors and Appeals, which would automatically stay execution of the death sentence. The death warrant, signed by Justice Trenchard, set March 18 for the execution.

The case would be argued, Fisher predicted, at the next term of the court, the third Tuesday in May.

Hauptmann, in his statement, voiced a new appeal for contributions to a defense fund and then signed a paper making Fisher trustee of such a fund.

"Before God, I swear I have nothing whatever to do with the kidnaping and murder of this child and that I know nothing whatever in connection with the crime," he said in a statement dictated to Miss Laura Apgar, secretary to Fisher.

"Miscarriage of Justice."

"I also swear that I know nothing in connection with the ransom money other than as I told it on the witness stand at Flemington. I feel that a grave miscarriage of justice occurred * * *"

He said he felt "very sorry" for the bereaved Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh, parents of the kidnaped and slain child and said he believed "the great admiration of the American people for the bereaved father * * swayed their judgment against me and I believe it likewise swayed the judgment of the jury * * *"

Meantime, the Department of Justice and Bronx authorities denied they possessed evidence Hauptmann had an accomplice in the crime.

Edward J. Reilly, chief of the defense staff, also said he was unaware police had worked on the theory Hauptmann had an accomplice.

He said the truth of his own theory a gang of at least four effected the crime might eventually be proved.

Hauptmann's impending removal to Trenton was a signal for the dismantling of the "Death House" at the State Prison.

Heiress Testifies

VIRGINIA WILCOX.

Spurned Love Of Kennamer, Vows Heiress

Virginia Wilcox Testifies of 'Date' With Youth Accused of Murder.

Pawnee, Okla., Feb. 15 (AP).—Winsome Virginia Wilcox, the 19-year-old Oklahoma oil heiress, for love of whom the defense contends Phil Kennamer, killed John F. Gorrell, jr., testified today the young defendant was "my first date" and said she believed he loved her still.

While Kennamer sat with head bowed, hands covering his eyes, the trim Tulsa girl told in a low, steady voice of their long acquaintanceship and Phil's unrequited love for her.

She related that the youth, who is the same age as she, once asked her for a date "two years in advance," and said frankly she couldn't even "see myself writing to Phil."

Follows Brother to Stand.

Miss Wilcox followed her brother, Homer F. Wilcox, jr., to the stand to climax a day which saw these developments in the murder trial moved here from Tulsa on a change of venue:

Testimony by two of Kennamer's childhood friends that they thought him insane, supporting the defense plea of temporary insanity and self-defense.

Testimony of one of them that he did not consider Kennamer insane at the present time. Admission by the State that the 23-year-old Gorrell wrote the alleged extortion note, directed to the Wilcox family and threatening the kidnaping of Virginia, which Kennamer claims was the reason for the quarrel which ended in the fatal shooting Thanksgiving night.

Declaration by Dr. Sidney Born, wealthy Tulsa University professor, that the "murderer" of his son, Sidney Born, jr., will be arrested soon.

Father Denies Born Suicide.

Sidney Born, jr., friend of Kennamer, drove him to a Tulsa Hospital Thanksgiving night, where the son of Federal Judge Franklin E. Kennamer met Gorrell. Gorrell was found shot to death a short time later in an isolated district of Tulsa. Ten days later Born was found fatally wounded under remarkably similar circumstances, but police declared his death a suicide.

Dr. Born said he was able to prove "beyond doubt Sidney did not commit suicide."

The girl testified she believed Phil had been in love with her for the last two years and was still in love with her.

Seacraft in Squadron of Four Crashes on Hill in Sicily.

Messina, Sicily, Feb. 15 (AP).—One of four British seaplanes traveling from London to the naval base at Singapore came to grief today on a Sicilian hillside, burning almost beyond recognition the nine persons aboard it.

Not until after an official investigation was the plane identified as the Ace of Diamonds, having been previously reported to be the Singapore.

Commander Lang, of the Singapore-bound squadron, hastened here by train from Naples, whence the plane had started out today, to take charge of the wreckage and the bodies of eight officers and men and one civilian.

The dead were tentatively listed as Flight Lieut. Henry Longfield Beatty, who was in charge of the craft; Flying Officer John A. C. Forbes and another lieutenant named Willis, four other officers and a civilian named Penn.

The Ace of Diamonds, together with three other British seaplanes, reached Naples two weeks ago and remained there because of engine trouble in two of the planes, awaiting replacement parts. Late today two of the group started toward Malta.

Reich to Join Air Security; Asks Parley

Agrees in Principle to Proposals, Invites British Talks.

Silent on Danube and Eastern Treaties and League Issue.

Berlin, Feb. 15 (AP). Germany tonight declared herself ready in principle to use her air forces to preserve the peace of western Europe, inviting Great Britain to inaugurate bilateral discussions to that end.

A note couched in broad terms—the Reichs' reply to Anglo-French proposals for an inclusive European security agreement—declared this air agreement might be one step toward solution of other problems and promised to examine the question of how to avoid the danger of an armaments race.

Germany agrees with the British and the French governments in desiring sincerely "to promote the safeguadring of peace," the note said, "the maintenance of which is in the interests of Germany's security as well as in the interests of the security of other European States."

Silent on Two Pacts.

The note specifically avoided mentioning the proposed eastern and Danubian pacts, but a foreign office spokesman said Germany's reply followed the general tone of the Anglo-French communique which was most specific on the air proposals.

The spokesman said there was no reason why the Anglo-German talks could not start almost immediately. He reemphasized Germany's preference for bilateral discussions as preliminary to wider conferences.

Regarding the reply's lack of concreteness concerning Germany's intentions as to return to the League of Nations and as to disarmament, the spokesman said "in these matters, too, our reply follows the tenor of the Anglo-French proposal.

"The German viewpoint on the Eastern pact was announced September 8, 1934, when a critical analysis was given out. We have asked for further information on the Danubian proposal in Rome and Paris but have not yet received an answer.

"By the friendly tone of our note we hope to keep the negotiations proceeding."

Declaring "the German Government welcomes the spirit of trustful discussion between the individual governments," the note promised that the Reich would thoroughly examine "the whole document concerning the European questions contained in them."

Would Avoid Arms Race.

A concern "for the security of the German Reich in its geographically exposed situation in the heart of Europe," as well as the desire for peace, will influence this examination, it continued, and Germany will give especial attention "to the question of with what means the danger of an armaments race can be avoided."

This danger "has arisen from the abandonment by the heavily armed states of disarmament as prescribed by treaties * * *.

"The German government welcomes the proposition to increase security against sudden attacks from the air by a convention to be made as soon as possible which shall provide for the immediate employment of the air forces of the signatories in favor of the victim of an unprovoked air attack.

"The German government is ready in principle to employ its air forces as a means of deterring disturbances of the peace.

"It is therefore willing to seek, in free accord with the powers concerned, ways and means by which such a convention can be realized, which shall guarantee the fullest possible security to all signatories."

Inviting London to enter into bilateral discussions to clear up "basic preliminary questions," the note concluded:

"The German government is in accord with the British and French

Tighten Liquor Laws, Abolish Hidden Bars, D. C. Urges Congress

Limit of Retailers to One for Every 15,000 Population Also Proposed; Efforts Designed to Halt Drinking After 2 A. M.

Abolition of Washington's "hidden bars" and a limitation on the number of liquor retailers was asked in Congress yesterday as the District Liquor Control Board proposed stricter regulations to end the flow of liquor after the 2 a. m. closing.

Representative Everett Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, introduced a bill in the House to amend the District liquor act in four particulars. Besides abolishing the "hidden bar," which has been caustically criticized by several members of Congress, the amendments would:

Limit the number of liquor retailers to one for every 1,500 population or about 325 for the entire city.

Prohibit the private tax-free importation of more than 12 quarts of liquor by any one person.

Require drug stores, delicatessens and other establishments that handle liquor as a sideline to observe the same opening and closing limitations.

The District Liquor Control Board at the same time requested Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman to draft another amendment which would prohibit the "sale, service or delivery" of drinks after the prescribed closing hour—2 a. m. on week nights and midnight on Saturday.

The purpose of the bill, it was explained, is to prevent the hasty purchase of drinks just before the curfew with the intention of sipping them at leisure long after closing hour.

"The amendment will prevent the drinking by guests in 'on sale' establishments when and after the hour of closing," Prettyman said.

"In these cases the patron buys within the prescribed time, but frequently consumes the drink after the bar has closed."

Representative Dirksen explained that his fourth amendment was introduced because of complaints that some establishments, particularly delicatessens, often sell bottled liquor after the midnight closing time imposed on retail liquor stores.

Another group of amendments proposed by the liquor control board would increase the maximum penalty for drunkenness in public places to $100 fine or 30 days in jail, or both, for the first offense; $200

Food Cost Up, AAA to Relax Crops Control

Temporary Abandonment in Few Fields Planned; Pre-War High Passed.

(Associated Press.)

Stirred by a rumble of public criticism over mounting food prices, the AAA prepared yesterday to act upon a finding that the farm prices of 14 basic commodities were 24 per cent above the prewar parity level.

A determination by the administration to abandon control of production of some crops, for one or two years at least, became known as one part of the counter-attack.

The intention further was bulwarked when food costs, as distinct from farm prices, were shown by the Bureau of Labor Statistics index to be more than 116 per cent of the 1913 level.

While they believe that high prices were due as much to last summer's drought as to crop reduction programs, officials said that as prices reached and stayed at the prewar level for four or six months they would be forced to abandon control until such time as prices against slipped downward.

Should the upward tendency continue, a reading of the adjustment law disclosed yesterday, the AAA will be forced to abandon rental benefit payments on those products which stay at parity. This would mean termination of reductions, since officials do not believe farmers would continue to restrict acreage unless they received cash for so doing.

The AAA as yet has not decided which of the crops might come within the group to be dropped from the control program. This, they pointed out, would be determined by which crops hold the parity level and for how long.

In the matter of food costs the Bureau of Labor Statistics index showed increases above the level of a year ago of 70 per cent for lard, 44 per cent for butter, 34 per cent

House Probers Ask Red Curb, Uphold Butler

'Moscow' Blamed for Agitators, Wall St. Accused, in Report.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Laws to curb Communism and other "isms" were recommended to the House yesterday by the McCormack committee which investigated "Un-American" activities.

In a review of facts uncovered during the year of its existence the committee characterizes as corroborative testimony by Maj. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, Marine Corps, retired, concerning efforts of Wall Street interests to organize a Fascist army.

Another important charge of the investigators, led by big, two-fisted Representative John W. McCormack (Democrat), Massachusetts, attributed to Moscow responsibility for the activities of 24,000 Communist "agitators" in this country.

The report, couched in direct, restrained language, included a searching expose of several radical organizations and concluded with the following proposals for legislation:

1. Mandatory registration with the Secretary of State of all propaganda agents for foreign governments or commercial concerns.

2. Authorize the Labor Secretary to terminate the stay here of visitors who disseminate propaganda or engage in political activity.

3. Negotiation of treaties to expedite deportation of undesirable aliens.

4. Make it unlawful for any one to advise soldiers, sailors, marines or reserves to violate laws or regulations.

5. Empower United States attorneys to prosecute individuals who refuse to testify before congressional committees.

6. Make it unlawful "to advocate changes in a manner that incites to the overthrow or destruction by

HOLC Probe Asked in House; 'Graft, Inefficiency' Charged

3 Democrats, 2 Republicans Urge Inquiry Before Rules Body, But Banking Committee Prepares to Give Bureau New $1,500,000,000.

(Associated Press.)

As one House committee prepared yesterday to give the Home Owners Loan Corporation $1,500,000,000 in new capital another heard five Representatives suggest that Congress investigate reports of everything from "graft" to "inefficiency" in the HOLC.

The Banking Committee concluded open hearings on the measure to expand the HOLC's capital from $3,000,000,000 to $4,500,000,000, and took it up in executive session. It may be brought up for a floor vote early next week.

Three of the five critics before the Rules Committee were Democrats. Like the two Republicans, they indorsed the resolution by Representative Sweeney (Democrat), Ohio, for the creation of a special House committee of seven members to investigate the HOLC.

Sweeney summed up his testimony by asserting that in addition to having heard accusations of "inefficiency," he had received information indicating a "lack of business ability on the part of somebody."

The complaints, he said, came from 45 States. He listed New York, Michigan, New Hampshire, Alabama, Indiana, Texas, Mississippi and Connecticut among them.

A Michigan correspondent wrote that at Grand Rapids "State officials received (HOLC) loans almost immediately" while others had to wait. From Connecticut came word that it took the aid of "gambling promoters" to get loans without lengthy waits.

Sweeney read a charge from New Hampshire that a loan had been made to the operator of a hotel in receivership although the law limited loans to three-family dwellings.

The other Congressmen and their principal comments:

Representative Hartley (Republican), New Jersey: "Things I hear indicate inefficiency, discrimination, delay, favoritism, political pull and even suggestions of graft."

Representative Bacon (Republican), New York: "My criticism is not only of inefficiency but the calloused attitude" of HOLC agents.

Representative Hoeppel (Democrat), California: "The entire HOLC in Southern California is a McAdoo stepchild. It is being used to build up a McAdoo machine."

Representative Pierce (Democrat), Oregon: "There is too much danger ahead for this to be overlooked. If Oregon is a sample, we are going to have thousands of homes on the Government's hands."

Roosevelt, Silent on Pending Bills, Annoyed by 'Guessers'

President Roosevelt made it emphatically clear at his press conference yesterday that he will not comment on legislation that is pending. At the same time, he asserted with some show of irritation, that deductions as to his attitude on certain bills in Congress will be dangerous.

The President was asked if the Copeland pure food and drug bill is an Administration measure. He replied by saying he favors a bill tightening up the food and drug laws. He was asked further if the Wheeler-Rayburn bill to eliminate utility holding companies bears Administration approval. He said he has not seen it.

This launched Mr. Roosevelt into an exposition of his policy to eschew any public utterance on the details of legislation until the measures have been approved.

Much can happen to bills between the time they are introduced and final passage by the two Houses, he pointed out. If he undertook to comment on details of legislation during that period, in his opinion, the discussions would be endless.

The supposition was Mr. Roosevelt is not necessarily wedded to the original forms in which Administration bills are presented and so long as principles are not changed he is willing to cooperate with Congress regarding the details.

Move Started To Put Bonus In Works Bill

Senators Sounded on Scheme to Dispose of Political Issue.

Inflationists and Foes of Banking Bill Also Make Proposals.

By Robert C. Albright.

A move to pay the $2,200,000,000 cash veterans' bonus out of the President's $4,880,000,000 works and relief bill quietly gathered headway in the Senate yesterday, as debate on the giant Federal aid measure opened with a tempest of minority opposition.

Conservative and insurgent Senators alike are being sounded out on the proposal, which will be vigorously fought by the Administration. Proponents argue this would satisfactorily dispose of an ancient political issue, without increasing the public debt over the President's own budget figures.

Three other late developments promised to transform the relief bill's road to Senate passage into a rocky one, although Administration supporters insist the measure eventually will be approved in much its present form.

Filibuster Projected.

They were:

Some opponents of the Administration's new bank bill are promoting a limited filibuster on the works and relief measure, calculated to hold up passage for two or three weeks. This would delay consideration of the bank draft as Senator Glass (Democrat), Virginia, who is managing Senate debate on the relief bill, is chairman of the subcommittee considering the bank legislation.

Senate advocates of Federal pay restoration April 1, having won that fight with the White House, are planning an amendment to the pending relief bill, paying the increase out of the $4,880,000,000 works appropriation, in a move to avoid new taxes to finance the raise.

Senate inflationists, led this time by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, will revive an amendment rejected by the Senate Appropriations Committee, to pay the entire $4,000,000,000 works appropriation with greenbacks.

Recommendation Omitted.

The Republican assault on the works bill got under way early yesterday, as soon as preliminary explanation of the committee report was completed by Chairman Glass. Coincident with floor consideration of the measure, it was learned the committee's report failed to carry the usual recommendation that the "bill do pass." Committee members said the omission was due to a "technicality."

Senator Glass, who in committee vigorously fought for changes in the bill, with partial success, went about his explanation in a dispassionate manner that caused Republican opponents to chuckle and evoked from Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, the comment:

"The able Senator from Virginia has discussed this bill with his usual candor, but with something less than his usual clarity."

One-year Limit Sought.

Yesterday's debate on the bill was preceded by a Senate Republican conference, where thin minority ranks went on record for limitation of the works measure to one year, instead of two. This was construed as a move to block allocations of huge work relief allotments in various States throughout the next presidential year, because of apparent political connotations.

Although not binding on the Republican minority, a majority of its members also voted to support the so-called McCarran amendment, to require maintenance of prevailing wage scales. The conference split two ways on the Adams amendment, to limit the appropriation to $2,880,000,000 instead of $4,880,000,000.

Some Democratic opponents expressed disappointment over Republican activity against the bill, both on and off the floor, voicing a fear that partisan issues, once injected, may make it difficult for candid Democratic critics of the measure to speak their mind.

Senator Vandenberg was the second Republican to speak against the measure. His address followed opening shafts of Senator Steiwer (Republican), of Oregon, on Thursday. Vandenberg called the measure "the most amazing legislative proposal in the history of this or

Senate Orders Ickes to Produce Data on Farley

Harris & Ewing.
LOUIS R. GLAVIS.

Waits Reports on Probe of PWA Deals Linked With Postal Chief.

Action Demanded By Senator Long

Interior Head Confers With Glavis but Refuses Comment.

By Felix Bruner.

Secretary Ickes was ready last night to send to the Senate all information obtained in an investigation of the PWA activities of a contracting concern and a building supply corporation with which the name of Postmaster General Farley has been connected.

A resolution, introduced by Senator Long (Democrat), of Louisiana, asking for the information, was adopted by the Senate yesterday.

Following adoption of the resolution, Ickes conferred with his chief investigator, Louis R. Glavis, but refused to talk about the matter.

In Sarasota, Fla., according to the Associated Press, Farley remarked: "I am being whereased in Washington today by Huey Long, but I do not take it seriously."

Differences Aired Again.

The Senate action again brought to the front reports of differences between the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Interior. Farley is reported to have been displeased at some of the activities of the Glavis detectives.

At the same time, differences between the two Cabinet officers were expected to be emphasized in another quarter. President Roosevelt is due to hear today a report on conditions in the Virgin Islands, where Ickes has been defending Republican Governor Pearson, to whom Farley objects.

The report is expected to be made at a conference with the President of Ickes, Dr. Ernest Gruening, director of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions, and Oscar Chapman, Assistant Secretary of the Interior. Gruening and Chapman returned recently from an inspection trip of the islands.

It was said the entire matter of insular possessions would be discussed, but it is expected discussion of the Virgin Islands will be one of the principal topics.

Fight Over Judgeship.

A part of the Virgin Island differences centers around appointment as Federal judge there of Webber Wilson (Democrat), former Representative from Mississippi. Circulation, through a misunderstanding, by the Interior Department of an article in The Nation attacking Cabinet members in connection with the Wilson appointment recently brought an apology from Ickes. The apology was addressed to Farley, Attorney General Cummings and Senator Pat Harrison.

The Long resolution reads:

"Resolved, that there be transmitted to the United States Senate by the Secreary of the Interior any and all reports * * * affecting any building project investigated or inquired into which affects the contracts let to or done by the firm of James Stewart Co., and particularly as may have affected the supplies furnished thereon by the General Builders' Supply Corporation.

"And be it further resolved that the Secretary of the Interior further transmit * * * inspections that have been assembled or conducted by Louis Glavis * * * which affect, mention, or report on James A. Farley or any concern with which said Farley has been or is now identified."

Long charged that the Stewart company has been favored in the award of public building contracts and that it obtained some of its supplies from a concern with which Farley was connected. He said the General Builders Supply Corporation had been headed by Farley and that it is now directed by Farley's brother-in-law.

"I don't know whether the Senate will make public or keep secret the information given it by PWA," he said. "That is entirely up to the Senate."

Senate Group Opens Inquiry Of NRA Today

Borah and King Confer on Sifting Charges of Monopoly Trend.

Immediate inquiry into alleged monopolistic practices under the NRA, and charges of small business "oppression" under the present recovery set-up, yesterday was decided on by a Senate Judiciary subcommittee.

Following a conference with Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, NRA critic and traditional foe of monopolies, Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Judiciary sub-committeee, called an executive session for this morning.

This development followed close on the heels of an unsuccessful move by Senators Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, and McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, to get their own many-phased NRA inquiry resolutions referred to the Senate Commerce Committee, before the President's recommendations for extending the recovery agency reach the Capitol.

Blocked for Second Time.

Nye and McCarran were blocked for the second time yesterday, when their broad resolution was referred by the Senate to the Finance Committee, regarded as friendly to the President's extension proposals. Senator Pat Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the group, indicated he will do nothing about the matter until the Administration's extension plan takes more concrete form.

Meantime, the President disclosed at a White House press conference that he is nearly ready to lay before Congress the Administration's plan for NRA continuation. Observers believe it will provide for a two-year extension, nearly in its present form, but modifying present exemptions from anti-trust laws.

Cummings' Aid Invited.

Senator King, whose investigating sub-committee comprises not only Borah but Senator McGill (Democrat), of Kansas, has asked a representative of the Attorney General's office to be present at this morning's closed session of the sub-committee.

The Utahan said he wants to find out what studies of monopoly under NRA already have been made of an official character. The subcommittee is not expected to limit its witnesses to those in "official" capacities, however.

The resolution, for which the subcommittee yesterday asked the Sen-

Divers' Slow Death Underseas As Ship Burned Is Revealed

St. Petersburg, Fla., Feb. 15 (AP).—A story of slow death by suffocation 6 fathoms under the surface of the Gulf of Mexico was told today by the fire-charred wreckage of the sponge-fishing boat Xios and bones and diving helmets of two members of her crew, located on the sea floor 12 miles off Cedar Keys, Fla.

The Xios and her crew of five had not been heard from since November, 1933, until Gabull Peterson, owner of the sponge boat Gabriel, found the wreckage Wednesday and gave the news of her fate to the sponge-fishing colony at Tarpon Springs, home of the missing men.

Peterson believes fire aboard the Xios cut off the air supply of her divers, gathering sponges on the sea bottom. He said the helmets of the divers were still attached to the underwater suits, indicating the men had died at work.

Those aboard the boat, Peterson concluded, either perished in the flames or jumped overboard and were drowned.

The members of the Xios' crew were John Gianetsis, captain; Nick Gianetsis, diver; Spiros Papatemetrious, air-line tender; Dennis Alefantis, engineer, and Nathaniel Sloan, Negro deckhand.

Johnston Plans for Trip; Indicates Pessimism on Reduction Pact.

Widespread pessimism is evidently felt in official circles over prospects of foreign cotton producing countries entering into an agreement with the United States for the limitation of production, it was revealed yesterday as Oscar G. Johnston, AAA expert, prepared to sail for Europe on a scouting expedition.

President Roosevelt confirmed disclosure in The Post yesterday that Mr. Johnston is being sent abroad by the Administration to explore all aspects of the foreign situation in an effort to ascertain what can be accomplished in the way of stabilizing the cotton situation.

Mr. Johnston will sail February 22.

British Attitude Feared.

One of the difficulties in the way of an international cotton production agreement grows out of the fact that the British have as great an interest in the consumption of cotton, through their textile mills, as they have in its production in India and Egypt, their dominions.

Moreover the world surplus is largely in the hands of the United States and other cotton exporting countries would gain nothing by agreeing to limit or reduce their output.

At all events, Mr. Johnston will sound out the cotton interests of other nations in an effort to see what can be done to stimulate American cotton exports.

Smith Sees Roosevelt.

Chairman Ellison D. Smith of the Senate Agricultural Committee, who is deeply interested in solving the cotton problem, conferred at length with President Roosevelt yesterday. On leaving the White House he stressed the need for increasing cotton exports. He said a greater use should be made of the flexible tariff clause in order that foreign countries might sell goods here and accumulate exchange with which to purchase American cotton.

Senator Smith also suggested that thought be given to repealing the anti-dumping clause in the American tariff act in order to give foreign producers an opportunity to sell here.

The South Carolinian also favored bilateral trade agreements as a temporary expedient to get foreign trade moving, but as a long-range program he regarded the Hull reciprocal trade program as the more desirable.

Town Is Placed In Fire Limit

Chevy Chase Extends Area to Cover North Section.

Extension of the limits of the area served by the Chevy Chase Fire Department to include the North Chevy Chase community was voted unanimously last night by the Chevy Chase Fire Board and representatives of Chevy Chase Sections 2, 3, 4, and 5, Martin's Addition, and North Chevy Chase.

The broadened area would be bounded on the north and east by Rock Creek and on the west by the Bethesda Fire Department limit.

Thomas M. Duff, president of the board, was in charge. Dr. Charles C. Clark reviewed the history of the Chevy Chase department, and W. L. Oren, jr., secretary of the board, said fire insurance rates in the community had been reduced as a result of the department's work.

T. Brook Amiss, chairman of the North Chevy Chase Citizens' Association, announced the group would meet soon to discuss the extension.

Jury Trial Demanded In Grocery Theft Case

Arraigned in the Marlboro police court on a charge of stealing groceries from the local Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., Andrew Crawford, colored, of Upper Marlboro, yesterday asked a jury trial. He was remanded to jail in default of bond.

Judge Waldo Burnside also committed Ralph Merryman, of Capitol Heights, to St. Mary's Training School after hearing charges of threatened attempts to break windows in his mother's home. Leroy Andrew Dukes, charged with vagrancy, was given three months in the House of Correction.

Between You and Me

McNutt, the Little Roosevelt; Hidden Traps; The President at Last Rebukes the Press.

By Raymond Clapper

HANDSOME Gov. McNutt of Indiana is not having such an easy time making a little Roosevelt out of himself, which accounts for the way he burned up the long-distance telephone wires to the White House this week.

His vice presidential candidacy for next year reached the point a few days ago where the State Democratic Editorial Association adopted resolutions offering Gov. McNutt to the Nation as a worthy successor to Vice President Garner. While Mr. Garner is said to have merely laughed, the reaction among the Governor's opponents in Indiana was to hurl more monkey wrenches at him.

It happened that he had been trying to force through his State Legislature a little NRA act. Its purpose was to give the Governor control over industry within the State comparable to that which the President, through NRA, has over industry generally, at least theoretically.

The measure went through the State House of Representatives and then lodged in a Senate committee. Senators apparently act in Indiana exactly as they do in Washington, and the Governor's bill became the target of senatorial potshots.

The Governor's friends insisted that the purpose of the legislation was to uphold the hands of President Roosevelt. Whereupon Indiana editors asked their Washington correspondents to ascertain whether President Roosevelt had asked for this little NRA bill. The question was put at Wednesday's White House press conference and Mr. Roosevelt replied in substance that he had not urged any States to act.

That appeared to saw off the limb on which Gov. McNutt was perched. He telephoned the White House to find out if he was being let down. The answer was that the President had been misunderstood and that a statement would be issued to clarify his position. This was to the effect that since legislation concerning the future of NRA was still to be determined by Congress, the President could not urge any State action meantime, although State cooperation with Federal legislation would be essential.

Such is the dynamite hidden behind seemingly innocuous questions which are tossed at President Roosevelt twice a week.

* * * *

Some Presidents find the strain too great and become so nervous from fear of stumbling into a hidden trap that they either do as Harding and Coolidge did, insist that questions be submitted in writing in advance or, as Hoover finally did, virtually cease holding press conferences.

Roosevelt dropped all safeguards such as written questions and took on the reporters catch as catch can. Embarrassing questions he turned off with a laugh or wisecrack. If any question ever got under his skin he was able not to show it.

Yesterday, however, an innocuous question was asked as to whether the President cared to comment on the Wheeler-Rayburn bill to abolish utility holding companies. Mr. Roosevelt had just responded to a similar question about pure food and drug legislation. But this time his face tightened and he remarked sharply that he could not ever comment on pending legislation and that no deductions were to be drawn as to his position. It was probably the first time he has let a note of rebuke creep into his voice though there have been times when he had considerable provocation to justify it. Though Mr. Roosevelt has had a more favorable press than most Presidents, incidents have come up which would have provoked furious wrath from some of his predecessors and he has smilingly overlooked them.

* * * *

On the surface there was little to explain his outburst. The probable explanation is that throughout the week while the Senate Finance Committee has been wrangling over the works relief bill, Mr. Roosevelt has been represented as supporting or opposing various proposed amendments to a degree which has made him appear to be almost a participant in the Senate committee's deliberations. He did not wish to be placed in this position and apparently was impelled, when the issue came up in another connection, to let go with both barrels.

* * * *

Of late there has been a noticeable tightening down of information from the Highest Authority, but Mr. Roosevelt has had such striking success with his policy of taking the public into his confidence that the chances are it is a temporary phase, due to the delicate situation in Congress, rather than to any idea that it would be a good thing to throw away the goldfish bowl.

* * * *

There couldn't possibly be any connection could there, between the fact that the Senate is about to investigate NRA again and the circumstance that last night at least one janitor in NRA headquarters complained about the exceptionally large volume of papers which had been thrown into the wastebaskets yesterday?

* * * *

Usually when a Senate committee reports out a bill it states in its report whether it recommends that the bill be passed or rejected. But when a loyal Administration Senator, Hayden, of Arizona, moved to report the works bill out of the Senate Finance Committee, he neglected through oversight to include in his motion the recommendation that the bill be passed. Accordingly, Chairman Glass, who is scrupulously literal, reported the bill with amendments, but without any recommendation.

Housing Administrator Moffett said yesterday that the country was out of the depression but didn't know it. This will be news to an even higher official who is in more intimate contact with business conditions. He said yesterday that there was no sign of an increasing commercial demand for money, that the problem was to get private capital to work directly instead of forcing it out indirectly now through the device of having the banks purchase Government bonds and letting the Government do the spending.

Ed Wynn visited Congress and said he couldn't find any humor in it. That's funny, because Will Rogers has made a fortune swiping jokes out of the Congressional Record.

Indiana House G. O. P. Bolt in Budget Row

Indianapolis, Feb. 15 (AP).—Republicans walked out of a session of the House of Representatives of the Indiana General Assembly today in protest against refusal of the Democratic majority to accept their amendments proposing reductions in the biennial budget bill. Despite the bolt by all but two of the 35 Republican members, the House proceeded with its study of the budget measure and advanced the bill carrying a total of $50,429,042.86.

'Grouchy' Old Dog Is Hero in Blaze

Howls Prevent Big Loss at William Collins Home.

Laddie, a 9-year-old Scotch collie, cut loose with a bark early yesterday that paid for all the hamburger and biscuit his master ever bought him.

The dog, owned by William M. Collins, president of the Railway Mail Association, was sprawled on the stair landing in the Collins home at 105 Summerfield road, Chevy Chase, Md., when a fire aroused him.

His howl brought members of the family, and they found the flames racing along the first floor joists. Volunteer fire fighters from Chevy Chase and Bethesda put out the blaze, which had started in some rubbish in the cellar.

As his years have mounted—nine is old for a dog—Laddie has become sort of grouchy. But that made no difference in the Collins household last night.

Bankhead 'Rests Up;' Leaves Navy Hospital

Representative William B. Bankhead of Alabama, House floor leader, returned to his apartment yesterday from the Naval Hospital, the Associated Press reported.

Bankhead was taken to the hospital January 2, and concern was expressed for a time over his condition.

"It's just a question of resting up now," he said. "I hope to be back before the committees report the major pieces of legislation. I have been keeping up with proceedings from day to day."

Roosevelt Gets Resignation of Dr. H. I. Millis

Not Acted on U. S. Labor Board Member's Move Yet, He Declares.

President Roosevelt said yesterday he had received the resignation of Dr. oward I. Millis as a member of the National Labor Relations Board but had not acted upon it. He indicated that the resignation had been in his hands for some time.

There have been repeated reports recently that members of the board planned to quit. Constant differences with the NRA and the President have arisen.

Recently President Roosevelt told the board it should not assume jurisdiction in labor cases growing out of disputes in industries with labor boards. The letter followed assumption of such jurisdiction in connection with a newspaper labor dispute. At that time it was reported the entire board was considering resigning.

It was indicated, however, that the Millis resignation was written before the board received the President's letter. It also has been reported that Edwin S. Smith, a member of the board, had resigned, but President Roosevelt said he knew nothnig of such a step. Smith would not comment.

The third member, and chairman, of the board is Francis Biddle.

It is expected that Dr. Walton H. Hamilton, a member of the National Industrial Recovery Board, will be named to replace Millis.

New Trials Granted In Bank Fraud Case

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 15 (AP).—John Bain, former chain banker in Chicago, his two sons and a son-in-law, today were granted new trials by the Illinois Supreme Court. They had been convicted in Cook County of conspiracy to defraud.

The Bain banks, a chain of 12 small neighborhood banks largely of Chicago's South Side, collapsed in 1931 with losses estimated at $13,000,000 to depositors. Failure of several real estate and investment concerns, also headed by Bain, brought total losses to an estimated $40,000,000.

U. S. Confident Credit Is Firm, Despite Deficit

Spokesman States Debt Won't Boost Rates on Borrowing.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Despite the sharp increase in the public debt caused by mounting Treasury deficits, the Administration, it was revealed yesterday, is confident that for sometime to come it will be able to obtain necessary financing by orthodox methods, without any rise in interest rates.

From a study recently completed by financial officers of the Government, it has been concluded that the last four years of Federal deficits, unbalanced budgets and increasing indebtedness has not visibly caused any loss of faith in the Government's credit.

This study showed that since 1929 interest rates on all classes of paper, including Government obligations, have fallen at the same time that a series of unbalanced budgets sent the public debt up to unprecedented figures.

The results of this study were revealed by a high ranking official who declined to be quoted. His disclosure came on the eve of the launching of the Treasury's campaign to interest the general public, the small householder as well as the usual investor, in the purchase of "baby bonds."

Reassurance on Credit.

Apparently the purpose of the effort to refute the critics of an unbalanced budget and other prophets of financial woe was to reassure the country that it need have no fear regarding the future of its country's credit and that its ability to borrow at a reasonable rate will not be impaired by such expenditures as the $4,880,000,000 relief fund, now pending in the Senate.

For the last four years, it was asserted by the Administration's financial spokesman, conservative elements in the country have been protesting against an unbalanced budget, predicting that it would destroy confidence in the Government's credit, that the Government would be compelled to pay high interest rates to get money and that such action would force up all other interest rates. The contrary has actually taken place, it was pointed out.

What has happened in this country has had its counterpart in other countries, where a downward trend in interest rates has been accompanied by rising government indebtedness, the study revealed, it was said. In Sweden, for instance, there was a rise of 13 per cent in the national debt from June, 1929, to June, 1934, with a fall in the yield on government bonds of 20 per cent.

Other Instances.

In the same period, it was further pointed out, the public debt of Australia increased 100 per cent, but the yield on government bonds dropped 30 per cent, while in Japan the debt went up 13.3 per cent, but the yield on government obligations decreased 23 per cent.

From these findings it was concluded there is no mysterious mechanism by which the degree of confidence in people's minds may be registered in interest rates. Instead, it was held, interest rates depend on the supply and demand of money and at this period the supply is very large in comparison with borrowings.

For instance, it was pointed out, interest rates were very high in 1929, a year in which the budget was balanced and the then administration was committed irrevocably to conservative fiscal policies. But in that year the demand for money was keen, it was added.

Interest rates in the view of the spokesman would remain low until private enterprise started to borrow. But when the private money markets again become active, it was argued, the Government would be relieved of part of the load it is now carrying and will not be required to borrow so heavily—if at all. No signs were yet visible of and increasing commercial demand for money, this official said.

Army Bombers Plan Long Nonstop Hop

San Diego, Calif., Feb. 15 (AP).—Capt. Harold D. Smith, who will command ten huge Army bombers on their flight from Washington to the Canal Zone next month, announced today an attempt will be made to fly nonstop on the 2,100-mile return trip.

Eleven bombers at Rockwell Field here are to be flown to Washington the latter part of next week, but only ten will make the round-trip flight to Panama. An overnight stop will be made at Miami on the trip southward.

Utility Institute Sharply Attacks Federal Report

Trade Board's Implication of Improper Financial Practices Assailed.

In caustic language, the Edison Electric Institute yesterday replied to a recent Federal Trade Commission report which implied improper financial practices in the "bewildering array" of securities of public utility companies.

"Continuing its efforts to destroy the credit of American business and for the immediate purpose of prejudicing forthcoming legislation," the institute said, "the Federal Trade Commission again reiterates many of the shopworn allegations it has advanced during its eight years of utility investigation."

The "legislation" referred to assumedly is the Wheeler-Rayburn bill to eliminate utility holding companies. As spokesman for a large percentage of the utility industry, the Institute is now training its guns on this proposal.

"The commission makes false inferences in its innuendoes that the existence of a multiplicity of security issues implies malfeasance on the part of the public utility companies," the statement continued, adding:

"In most cases, such securities represent the outstanding issues of subordinate companies or of subsidiaries which have now been consolidated or else are in the process of consolidation. These corporations were not organized for the mere exhiliration of doing so, or for the purpose of concealing profits, but were created because a necessity existed to do something essential for the public welfare which existing companies were not authorized to do."

Violin Prodigy Makes Roosevelt His 'Hero'

Congress Behaves for the President, Says Yehudi Menuhin.

Congress would do well to mind its manners for the next few days.

It would, that is, if it cares anything at all about keeping unshattered the dreams of an 18-year-old boy who hopes to see the world, including Congress, grow better.

The boy is Yehudi Menuhin, who is an egregious violin virtuoso, sometimes called prodigy, but who in many other things is a boy.

Yehudi came to Washington yesterday with his father and companion, a short, excited man who seems still a little incredulous that he, Moshe Menuhin, should have sired, of all things, not only a son prodigy, but two prodigious daughters as well.

Hero-Worships Roosevelt.

When he isn't rehearsing for a concert here tomorrow, Yehudi expects to put in his time sightseeing, picking up points of interest overlooked on previous visits. He expects, among other things, to drop in on Congress.

"The last time we were here," Yehudi said, "they (Congressmen) were lying around, smoking, reading newspapers, sleeping. Those that were present, at least. But that was the old deal. This is the New Deal. Things will be different."

What makes Yehudi so confident, his father explained, is President Roosevelt, whom he hero-worships with an enthusiasm possible only to an 18-year-old dreamer, and to whom he therefore believes all things possible, right down to making Congress sit up and behave.

Washington audiences have changed under the New Deal, Yehudi has found. So why not, he reasons, Congress?

"Under the old deal they were stiff, aloof," he said, lightly patting the palm of his hand with his finger tips and sticking his nose in the air to show exactly what he meant. "But now they unbend. They applaud. And I love it."

Yehudi, it might be said, has a faith in Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal that is virtually limitless. He sees the New Deal as a revolution "the most profound of any in the world." And he's very grateful to Mr. Roosevelt for keeping it bloodless.

Plan a Lion Hunt.

Blood offends Yehudi; so much so that he and his father have worked an African jungle expedition into their world concert tour next year, not, as you might suppose, to hunt big game, but because they have heard that lions around Johannesburg are quite tame. Yehudi wants to feed them.

Getting back to the President and the New Deal, Yehudi would like a law requiring an appreciable lowering of temperatures in the Nation's homes, hotels and trains. He has the perfect devil of a time, you gather, trying to keep his violin from warping and himself from expiring from overdoses of steam heat.

For nearly an hour Yehudi Menuhin talked, running from music to politics to economy, displaying the maturity of wit and viewpoint you'd expect from a boy who appeared as a soloist with the San Francisco Orchestra when he was 7 years old. His blue-gray eyes laughed and the fingers of his left hand ran in the conscious exercise of a musician across the arm of his chair.

Then he got up and walked to a window in his Mayflower Hotel suite and looked sadly outside. Yehudi thought when he came to Washington he'd find the grass green, spring beginning, his father explained.

Roper Upholds Profit Motive To Trade Press

Administration Not Oppos to Private Games, He Tells Editors.

The profit motive and principle must be a mainspring of human action in our social system, Secretary of Commerce Roper yesterday told the National Conference of Business Paper Editors. Nothing could be further from the truth, he said, than the opinion that the Administration has sought to obstruct or eliminate the making of profits.

"Let us remember that the tax system of this Government is based entirely upon the profit system," Roper said, "and to eliminate profits would mean to abolish the source of the Government's sustenance and revenue."

He added, however, that it was the duty of the Federal Government to safeguard the public "against practices which allow the making of unsound, unethical and exorbitant profits."

"In these principles is involved much of the philosophy of the New Deal, constituting an effort, to the best extent possible, to bring about fair treatment for all."

Referring to holding companies, Roper said there was "misconception" regarding the Administration policy.

"I believe," he said, "it will be admitted by all fair-minded persons that there should be some correction of such of these institutions as have been operating against the public good and that where such evils are found to exist there should be corrective remedies applied.

"However, this attitude upon the part of the Administration should not be construed as an indictment of sound and constructive corporate finances and beneficial trusteeships."

70 More Hired To Guard NRA

New Men Will Try to Stop 'Leaks,' Protect High Officials.

The NRA, designed primarily to put men to work, has taken another step in that direction, it was revealed yesterday.

It has decreased the total of unemployed by 70, with the hiring of that many additional guards. Twenty-seven of the new guards have been assigned to the multigraph and press room, evidently to prevent any "leaks" concerning proposed NRA legislation, or future NRA action.

Four others have been assigned to guard, respectively, the offices of S. Clay Williams, W. A. Harriman, A. D. Whiteside and D. M. Nelson, all reputed millionaires and all high NRA officials. Others have been assigned to various posts in six buildings in which NRA offices are situated.

The official explanation of the addition to the number of guards is that an epidemic of petty thieving has been harassing employes and that some documents have been stolen.

Weyerbacher Admits Offer To Aid Inventor

But Step Was Sanctioned by the Navy, He Tells Court of Inquiry.

(Associated Press.)

Commander Ralph D. Weyerbacher, haled before a naval court of inquiry at the insistence of a House committee, yesterday frankly told the court he had offered his advisory services to a private aircraft company, but contended it was with the sanction of the Navy.

His contention, contained in a brief, was corroborated by Ernest L. Jahncke, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who said he had expressed no objection to the proposal that Weyerbacher advise the Cairns Development Co. if the work did not interfere with Weyerbacher's duties and was not given to a concern having "contractual relations" with the Government.

Weyerbacher told the committee he wrote a letter in 1930, when commander of the naval aircraft factory at Philadelphia, to Jesse L. Livermore, Wall street operator, then backing the Cairns Co. inventions, offering the services of himself and Lieut. C. B. Harper, now retired.

Got Navy Ruling, He Says.

Before doing it, Weyerbacher declared, he procured a ruling from the Navy judge advocate general, and this ruling was passed on to him through Jahncke.

A sub-committee of the House Military Affairs Committee, in requesting Secretary Swanson to investigate Weyerbacher, delivered to the Navy Department the Weyerbacher-Livermore letter.

Capt. W. W. Wensinger, of the Marine Corps, the judge advocate, presented a letter from Weyerbacher to Norman Finninger, Cairns official, in February, 1931, saying he would "push along as far as possible" the company's offer to sell the Navy a specimen fuselage, bought later for $3,500. A specimen wing also was bought for $1,700.

Offer Not Accepted.

Maj. Henry Leonard, Marine Corps, retired, Weyerbacher's attorney, said after the session that he did not consider sale of the wing and fuselage to come within the "contractual relations" limitations fixed by Jahncke.

The offer of advisory service by Weyerbacher was not accepted. Weyerbacher insisted it had no connection with aircraft contracts, with which he was not concerned until his transfer to Washington in 1931.

Edmund Cairns, the company inventor, a slight, bearded man, and the slender Weyerbacher sat almost side by side in the Navy Yard inquiry room as Cairns told of their first meeting.

That was in the summer of 1929, when Weyerbacher was considering a job with a company to be financed by the Aluminum Co. of America to manufacture airplane parts designed by Cairns.

Both Plans Failed.

The plan fell through, but later, said Weyerbacher's brief, they met again. Col. Charles A. Lindbergh wanted to buy a Cairns plane, and Weyerbacher was mentioned for the job of technical adviser to Cairn's company, whose plant is at Naugatuck, Conn.

Lindbergh did not buy the plane, but in April, 1930, Weyerbacher wrote Livermore offering services of himself and Harper at $1,500 a month, plus $100 a day and expenses for actual working time and a share of stock to be determined "later." Again the plan fell through. Jahncke testified that he and the late Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, former chief of Navy aviation, considered Weyerbacher an officer "outstanding for his integrity."

Eastman Prepares A Tentative Report On Transit Subsidy

Joseph B. Eastman, railroad coordinator, said last night that a report being prepared under his direction on the subject of transportation subsidies had not reached its final form, but that copies of a tentative report had been sent to various persons for comment and criticism.

Eastman said that he had reached no conclusions on any plan to tax motor trucks and that he did not yet know what form proposed legislation expected to accompany the report would take.

"The tentative investigation which my staff, with the cooperation of many outside experts, has been making to determine whether or not there is a subsidy is not completed and no conclusions have been reached," he said.

"The study embraces not only highway transportation, but rail, water and air."

In addition, further increases in meat costs during 1935 were predicted from yesterday's estimate of live stock population on farms on January 1 showing decreases of 11 per cent in cattle, 35 per cent in pigs, and 9 per cent in sheep, compared with January 1, 1934.

Meanwhile, the farm value of all three had increased to the point of compensating for reduced numbers, total values in all three cases being higher than a year ago.

Naval Board Hears Weyerbacher Charges

Macon's Metal Blamed in Loss Of Upper Fin

Structure Tore Gas Cell, Chief Boatswain's Mate Tells Inquiry.

San Francisco, Feb. 15 (AP).—Failure of the Macon's metal structure where the upper fin joined to the extreme after portion of the ship was given today by one of the two men nearest the "casualty" spot as the cause of the dirigible's loss at sea.

The man was Chief Boatswain's Mate R. J. Davis, who was inspecting the top fin at the Macon's stern when the airship lurched and went out of control Tuesday off Point Sur, south of here.

Testifying before a naval court of inquiry, Davis expressed the belief the structure gave way because of pressure exerted by a gust of wind.

The chief petty officer, who said he had spent nearly 7,000 hours in airship flight in six and a half years, stuck under questioning to his theory that the upper fin was carried away by the wind.

He told of another casualty to the Macon which occurred last May over Texas, when diagonal girders were sheared off in frame 17, where the other end of the port fin was anchored. He said he believed this was caused by the bumpy weather over Texas.

Cautious because of his long experience on airships, including service on the Los Angeles and the Akron, Davis said he inspected the stern of the Macon between 3 and 4 p. m. Tuesday when the ship hit squally weather. He told the court he thought the fins the most important part of the ship.

"I heard a crash a little after 5 p. m. as I was inspecting the forward part of the top fin," Davis said. "I noticed a rush of gas and the ship lurched, as if struck by a severe gust of wind.

"It sounded to me as if the structure was pulling out where the fin was bolted to the structure. Undoubtedly the structure tore the gas cell. The fin was carried away."

Joseph E. Steele, aviation ordnance man, said he accompanied Davis during the latter's inspection of the stern of the ship.

"Without warning, except for a slight jar, there was a crash," Steele said. "It sounded like the girders started to buckle and fall."

Davis said he found nothing out of the ordinary during the inspection of the stern before the crash.

From Hartford, Conn., where Dr. Karl Arnstein, chief engineer of the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation, testified last Wednesday at the trial of the $3,000,000 suit brought by the Bauch Machine Tool Co. against the Aluminum Corporation of America, it develops that the engineer did not express dissatisfaction with the tensile strength of materials used in the Macon and Akron.

Dr. Arnstein testified that samples of duralumin guaranteeing a yield point of 42,000 pounds per square inch had been submitted prior to construction, but that duralumin having a yield point of 44,000 pounds was subsequently provided. Dr. Arnstein expressed complete satisfaction with the higher yield point guaranteed.

Lost Radio Man's Birthday Today

Sunnyvale, Calif., Feb. 15 (AP).—Tomorrow is the birthday of Ernest Dailey, radio operator who lost his life when the Navy dirigible Macon plunged into the sea Tuesday. He would have been 29.

Mrs. Dailey received a bouquet and a box of candy for Valentine day. Her husband had purchased the gifts before he left on the fatal voyage.

Memorial services for the two victims of the Macon disaster—Dailey and Mess Attendant Florencio Edquiba—will be held Sunday at the air base here.

Replace the Macon, McLeod Demands

Construction of a "disaster-proof" airship to replace the wrecked Macon was demanded yesterday by Representative McLeod (Republican), Michigan, ranking minority member of the Navy Sub-committee on Appropriations.

Accidents suffered by the Macon and other dirigibles, he insisted, failed to prove the craft impractical.

"In spite of our bad luck," McLeod added, "nobody can say that they are impracticable when we consider the splendid results obtained by Germany with the Graf Zeppelin. Thought also should be given to the fact that our own Los Angeles, which was built in Germany, was in service from 1924 to 1932 and, although now decommissioned, is still capable of performing efficient service."

McAdoo to Press Probe.

The Senate voted yesterday to continue its investigation into bankruptcies, the Associated Press reported. Senator McAdoo (Democrat), California, was chosen to head the committee in place of Senator Ashurst (Democrat), Arizona.

any other democracy," terming it a "$5,000,000,000 speculation" and a "Midas fund" of "astronomical figures."

"It was born in the mysterious dark," he said, "it has defied intelligent illumination; its only merit is a pious, puzzling hope; its program is a lottery, and its only justification is the counsel of desperation."

The bill would have Congress abdicate its powers, requiring the country to lean on "a dubious dream" and forcing posterity to pay the bills, said Vandenberg.

"If it can be done at all," he declared, "the rigid and vital constitutional theory of the control of the public purse by the Congress is at journey's end. This is the last round-up."

While Senate Republicans were seeking to limit the bill to one-year, reporters asked the President if he could spend $4,880,000,000 in 12 months. He smilingly replied he would do the best he could.

Will Test Bonus Plan.

Senate bonus advocates have not determined which of their number will offer the cash bonus amendment to the works and relief bill, but freely admitted the plan would be put to a floor test. They claimed last night to have won several so-called conservatives over to their way of thinking.

Representative Wright Patman (Democrat), Texas, last night made a radio appeal for support of his own bill to pay the bonus, as opposed to the Vinson measure, favored by the American Legion, and giving the Treasury power to make the payment, presumably through a bond issue.

He offered to transfer the authorship of his measure to Representative Fred Vinson (Democrat), Kentucky, proponent of the rival bill, to gain support for his own plan to make the payment "without a bond issue or an increase in taxes and without danger of unbridled inflation."

force and violence" of the Federal or State governments.

Concerning the Butler incident, the committee observed:

"Maj. Smedley D. Butler • • • testified • • • as to conversations with one Gerald C. MacGuire in which the latter is alleged to have suggested the formation of a Fascist army under the leadership of Gen. Butler.

"MacGuire denied these allegations under oath, but your committee was able to verify all the pertinent statements made by Gen. Butler, with the exception of the direct statement suggesting the creation of the organization. This, however, was corroborated in the correspondence of MacGuire with his principal, Robert Sterling Clark, of New York City, while MacGuire was abroad studying the various forms of veterans' organizations of Fascist character."

Meanwhile, it was disclosed the the Justice Department is investigating Butler's charges.

Outstanding committee allegations against the Communist Party included:

Warns Against Rebellion.

"The American Communist Party is affiliated with the Third Internationale, which was created by officials of the Soviet government and is still housed in Moscow with governmental approval and cooperation. This affiliation • • • is of a definitely organic character involving specific jurisdiction on the part of the governing body over the Communist Party of the United States."

"The citizen voter who goes to the polls and enrolls under the Communist emblem does not thereby become a member of the Communist movement of the United States. Therefore, when it is shown that the membership of the Communist party is approximately 24,000, it merely means that there are 24,000 duly accredited agitators and leaders who are obeying the instructions from the Moscow authority."

"Freedom of speech does not authorize insurrection or rebellion against the Government. Liberty does not mean license."

The committee reported "wiles and blandishments" and "scurrilous attacks" were utilized here in behalf of the Nazi movement by propaganda experts, German consuls and "the German Embassy itself."

Navy Contract 'Deals' Linked To White House

Apportionment Instead of Bidding Defended by Homer as 'Humane.'

(Associated Press.)

Confronted by a threat of citation for contempt, A. P. Homer, Washington marine architect, asserted before the Senate Munitions Committee yesterday that the efforts of the White House, the Navy Department and several shipbuilders had combined in apportioning naval building jobs in 1933 among the shipyards—regardless of low bidders.

"I think the distribution was made by our great President," Homer flared out at one time, "not merely on the question of legality, but on a basis of humanity."

Another mention of the White House came indirectly when a letter was introduced attributing to Mrs. Mary Eben, one of Mrs. Roosevelt's secretaries, "some magic charm for business done with the Administration."

Throughout the day Homer was on the stand, notwithstanding he once reminded the committee his blood pressure was dangerously high. The witness' reactions ranged from defiance to jolly compliance under questioning by committee members into the wide range of his "contacts."

These included, he disclosed, associations with printing press companies, naval officials, Democratic national headquarters during the 1932 Presidential campaign, and, finally, with President Roosevelt.

"I have had Mr. Roosevelt at my home many times," Homer told the committee, but indicated it was prior to the Chief Executive's election to the Presidency.

The threat of a contempt citation grew out of his refusal at first to explain what he meant when he quoted Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chief of construction of the Navy, as indicating the Navy approved of an alleged agreement among the smaller shipyards for a distribution of destroyer jobs by negotiation, rather than bidding.

The threat was made when he professed inability to remember, and finally refused to answer as to a conversation he had held with Admiral Land, and later quoted him as saying the naval chief felt a destroyer job should go to the Bath Iron Works, of Bath, Me., a client of Homer's.

The threat caused him to change his mind, and he conceded he had "stretched" his statement about Land.

"I apologize for the error," he said.

The letter about Mrs. Eben, whose White House connection was not described to the committee, was written by W. M. Rice, of Gielowzn, Inc., New York engineering firm, to Homer.

Dated August 15, 1934, the letter said:

"Who is Mrs. Mary Eben? She has some magic charm for business done with the Administration, providing your bonding and insurance business is given to her husband, Mr. Eben.

"It has been suggested to me by several people that she is in a position to hurry up the consideration of the Navy patrol boats and possibly to make suggestions as to who should be the central drawing office.

"What is your thought in this matter?"

Homer said he had not identified her for the firm, but went on to explain that construction of patrol boats by the Navy Department was under consideration at present.

Campaign Activities Bared.

Late in the day the questioning of Homer veered to information brought out earlier that he had written letters from Democratic headquarters to shipbuilding agencies and others in 1932 soliciting contributions to the campaign.

He denied any money had been contributed by those he solicited.

"Some were very caustic in their replies, that I was backing the wrong horse."

Earlier testimony regarding a memorandum he had prepared in support of a claim for $50,000 against the Bath Iron Works for services in connection with the destroyer allocations was reviewed, including references by Homer to solicitation of President Roosevelt for assistance in obtaining contracts for the Maine company.

Again the name of Mr. Roosevelt was brought in when the committee introduced a letter dated October 13, 1932, signed by Homer and directed to G. A. Eddy, president of the Goss Printing Press Co., Chicago, soliciting campaign contributions.

Admits Diary Authorship.

"That letter was never sent," Homer snapped. "It was stolen from my files by a Republican employe."

He explained that it was disapproved by Democratic headquarters.

"You wrote it, however," Senator Barber (Republican), New Jersey, insisted.

"Yes."

Heavy set and with a Taftian chuckle, which he employed frequently, Homer told of his associations with the major figures in the shipbuilding and naval world. He referred to Admiral Emory S. Land as "Jerry," and to W. S. Newell, president of the Bath Iron Works, as "Pete." He confirmed, too, a story told by previous witnesses of having kept a sort of "diary," in which he claimed to have interceded with President Roosevelt for his client, the Bath Yards.

The diary, he told the committee, was given his attorneys to justify his claim for $50,000 against the Bath Yards for services he claimed to have given in 1933 in obtaining two destroyer contracts for the company. "Nearly all of it," he said, was correct. He did not receive the fee.

"You wouldn't file a fraudulent claim?" Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, asked.

"There is such a thing as poetic license," Homer chuckled, while the committee and spectators laughed.

A 'Golden-Haired' Boy.

Again he chuckled when a letter was shown in which he commented he sought to make Newell the 'golden-haired child' in the Navy Department.

"What did you mean by the term 'golden-haired' boy," Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, asked.

"Perhaps"—and again the chuckle, "I used the wrong expression."

But the committee was intent on other things. It introduced a letter from Homer to Newell which it interpreted as bearing upon its previous charge that the Navy had participated in 1933 in apportioning jobs equitably among the yards, even before $238,000,000 of public works money was available for the construction.

He declared Admiral Land "feels as you do," he wrote to Newell on May 25, 1933, "that when the big program comes through several of the 1,500-ton (destroyers) will perhaps fit you better." He explained that the yards could not handle cruisers and larger craft.

Yields to Contempt Threat.

"Tell the committee how much you stretched the story Admiral Land told you," demanded Senator Clark.

"I refuse to answer," replied Homer, after a moment's hesitation.

"Then I am prepared to ask the committee to cite you for contempt," Clark shot back.

After a hurried conference with his attorney, Homer finally answered:

"I reached the conclusion as to what I stated in my letter on the basis of a conversation I held with Admiral Land, but it was not based on any statement of Admiral Land."

Committee members at first had been inclined to place the same interpretation on Homer's letter as on one written early in the summer of 1933 by Clinton L. Bardo, then president of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation. The Bardo letter had brought from members charges that the Navy was a "party to collusion" among the shipbuilders.

Secretary Swanson of Navy denied such collusion and prepared for an investigation.

'Out of Depression,' Moffett Declares

But Nation Doesn't Know It, Housing Chief Says.

Leaving a conference with President Roosevelt, Housing Administrator James A. Moffett yesterday expressed the opinion "we are out of the depression, but the country doesn't know it."

Moffett, who has returned recently from a trip to the West Coast, said he reported optimistically on conditions as he found them in that section of the country.

A large degree of unemployment should be absorbed in the next 60 days, the housing chief declared. He added that Los Angeles and San Francisco had both given enthusiastic backing to the housing program.

43 Cars Stolen In Washington Traced to Gang

Base of Theft Ring Found in Statesville, N. C., Police Reveal.

An automobile theft ring, with widespread operations extending along the Eastern seaboard into Virginia and North Carolina, was believed uncovered yesterday when Detective Sergeant Jake Wolf, of the local automobile squad, wired from Statesville, N. C., reporting recovery of at least 43 cars stolen in Washington during the last several months.

In his report, Wolf told Capt. B. W. Thompson, assistant chief of detectives, that Statesville apparently was the "base" of operations. It was indicated that hundreds of stolen cars were taken to the North Carolina town for disposal.

With Joseph Milensky, Department of Justice agent, and Sheldon W. Fairchild, investigator for the Insurance Underwriters Detective Bureau, Detective Sergeant Wolf trailed activities of the suspected ring through Virginia and into North Carolina.

Forty-three stolen cars have already been recovered, Wolf reported, and the total possible will reach 75 before he returns next week. In nearly every case, he said, the cars have been sold to unsuspecting buyers.

In addition, the detective said, eight other purloined machines were found near Gretna Green, Va. Several of the recovered cars were reported stolen here back in 1931. Arrests are expected within a few days, police said.

Flandin Triumphs In Chamber Vote

Paris, Feb. 15 (AP). — Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin won a heavy vote of confidence in the Chamber of Deputies today after revealing a breach with certain financial interests. The vote was 444 against 124 in support of the government's unemployment relief plans.

The Bank of France was not mentioned in the speech, but the premier's reference to hostile "oligarchies" was interpreted as referring to those members of the bank's board of regents who blocked Flandin's demand that the bank discount government paper to ease credit.

Fisch Took Part in Kidnaping, Hauptmann Now Convinced

Flemington, Feb .15 (U.P.).—Bruno Richard Hauptmann believes Isador Fisch was involved in the kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby and that he had accomplices.

Hauptmann, convicted and sentenced to death for the baby's murder, puffed a cigar as he spoke earnestly through the bars of his cell in Hunterdon County Jail tonight.

"I am convinced now that Isador was involved in the kidnaping," he said. "But he must have had accomplices. He could never have done it alone.

"I didn't bother to ask him what was in the box he left with me when he went to Germany because he didn't ask any special care be taken of it. I thought it contained some personal papers."

The stolid German appeared in good spirits and looked physically fit as he greeted his visitors. He was dressed in brown trousers, gray shirt and a blue tie.

He reiterated his innocence and said the whole thing was "like a bad dream."

"Why I don't even know where Hopewell is," he said.

Staring into the faces of his interviewers, the prisoner said he had faith in his lawyers and said he believed he "would never go to the electric chair."

"But even above the chair, I am concerned about my family. I hope if anything happens they will be provided for."

Before saying "goot bye" Hauptmann reached into a pocket for two cablegrams he received today from his mother in Germany.

"This made me happier than anything since they arrested me," he said, reading it aloud in German:

"Ich glaube das alles gut wird. Deine Treue Mutter."

Translated it says:

"I believe everything will be all right. Your Faithful Mother."

Trap to Catch Outlaw Fails In Mountains

Officers Organize Hunt for Kirby Dellinger at Homes of Relatives.

Harrisonburg, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.). Twenty-six heavily armed officers recruited from Harrisonburg and Winchester, early this morning engaged in a fruitless search for Kirby Dellinger, who robbed the Mount Jackson National Bank of $2,214 on July 25, 1927.

The officers surrounded the home of Dellinger's brother and brother-in-law in the mountainous section of western Shenandoah County after receiving a tip that Dellinger had returned home for a visit with two companions in an automobile bearing Illinois license plates.

After receiving the tip, Sheriff Luther G. Sheetz summoned police from Harrisonburg and Winchester, deputy sheriffs from Shenandoah, Page and Warren Counties, and State highway patrolmen. They were armed with machine guns, high-powered rifles, tear gas guns and bombs and revolvers. The officers were determined to take no chances with Dellinger.

No trace was found of Dellinger and officers believed he received information he was to be surrounded and retreated to nearby West Virginia. Relatives declared to officers they had not seen Dellinger since the day of the robbery.

The officers went over almost impassable mountain roads and braved the mud and rain for three hours. They descended upon the houses simultaneously. More than three hours was spent in the search.

Dellinger and two women entered the Mount Jackson bank to get a bill changed and when the teller looked up he was facing a gun. The trio scooped up all the money available and ran to a waiting car driven by another accomplice. The four escaped in the mountians along the nearby West Virginia line. Officers searched for them a week in the mountains but it was later learned the bandits went to Washington via Wardensville, W. Va. The robbery was the boldest and only one of its kind ever perpetrated in Shenandoah County.

Passport Trouble Explained by Enzo

Rome, Feb. 15 (AP).—Enzo Fiermonte, boxer, said tonight Italian officials clearly intimated to him that a possible call for army service in Ethiopia was the only reason his passport was being withheld. It was taken up several days ago.

Fiermonte, referring to the tangles involving him, his wife, the former Mrs. Madeline Force Astor Dick, and his first wife, Tosca Fiermonte, said: "My wife and I have both made mistakes in the past, but we have reached an understanding. We were going to start anew when this war business interfered. As soon as my papers are returned we will start our second honeymoon and go back to America."

He said his first wife had made no complaints against him.

Radio Amateurs Now Prepared To Provide Emergency Service

Salisbury, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—Should sleet which recently demoralized all forms of wire communication again occur, several communities on the Delaware-Maryland-Virginia peninsula will be prepared to meet the situation.

Short wave amateur operators have formed a league and arranged through United States Army Radio Station W3SN, Baltimore, to relay messages to their destination.

Schedules have been planned with the Army station to accept messages for filing with telegraph companies in Baltimore. The station likewise will schedule messages for the Eastern Shore with the nearest amateur operator.

When wire services were put out of commission by sleet for nearly a week recently, local amateurs handled scores of commercial messages and press dispatches. The licensed amateur can receive no compensation for his services or use of his station.

Peninsula amateur operators who will participate in the future emergency schedules and their station designations are:

Edward L. Thompson, W3CQS, and L. Dean Powell, W3VJ, Salisbury; R. E. Ingalls, W3EUV, Frankford, Del.; John E. Harper, W3CFX, St. Michaels, and H. R. Holliday, W3BYH, Easton.

The $4,880,000,000 work relief measure, passed by the House and now before the Senate, he said, contemplates "a vast and comprehensive program of public works of useful and justifiable projects—of such a nature as to afford least interference with private business.

Social security, he said, "is a problem which we must face and solve." President Roosevelt's message on the subject he described as "a great historical document."

Tie Vote Balks Liquor Control In West Virginia

Kump State Monopoly Bill Technically Defeated by Deadlock.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 15 (AP). Gov. Kump's State monopoly liquor control bill, loaded down with dozens of amendments, was mired in the Senate today—technically defeated by an unannounced 13-13 tie vote.

Shorn of its one-man commission advocated by the Governor, and providing sales of liquor by the drink in hotel dining rooms, railroad dining cars and private clubs, the bill seemed to be headed for passage by the Senate this morning.

"Technical amendments will be offered to make the bill conform to the amendments adopted last night and the bill will be passed and sent to the House by noon," legislative leaders said.

The House was held in session—it being a foregone conclusion that some of the Senate amendments would not satisfy the delegates and a conference committee would be necessary. As no word came from the Senate, the House finally recessed shortly after 1 o'clock to allow the Senate to end its amendments.

A few minutes later the bill was placed upon passage and when the roll call reached Senator Fleming (Democrat), Pleasants, he reserved his vote until later.

The vote wavered from side to side—the Republican minority voting as a unit against the bill—and when the Pleasants Senator's tally showed the vote 13 ayes, 12 nays, he was on his feet immediately shouting "this, to my mind is unconstitutional."

Heiress, Brother Testify in Slaying

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Homer Wilcox, jr., and his pretty sister, Virginia, heirs to an oil fortune, as they arrived at Pawnee, Okla., where they appeared yesterday in defense of Phil Kennamer, son of a Federal judge, on trial for murder.

Spurned Love Of Kennamer, Says Heiress

Virginia Wilcox Testifies on 'Date' With Youth Accused of Murder.

October 10 of a plot by Gorrell to kidnap Virginia, but said he did not then believe it.

He admitted on cross-examination he had shot out street lights near the spot where Gorrell died in the exclusive Tulsa Forest Hills residential district.

Kennamer "Cleared" on Note.

"Wasn't it true," shouted Prosecutor W. F. Gilmer, jr., "you were right there on the spot when that boy (Gorrell) was killed?"

"No," replied young Wilcox in an almost inaudible voice.

Featuring the morning's court session was the unexpected admission by the State that Gorrell, not Kennamer, wrote an extortion note to H. F. Wilcox, demanding $20,000 upon threat of death to one of his children.

The admission came shortly after Judge Kennamer testified he did not believe the note was written by his son.

It halted the testimony of a handwriting expert, J. C. Shearman, of Wichita, Kans., who said he was a student of Albert S. Osborne, handwriting expert, who testified for the State in the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

Two schoolmates of young Kennamer—Claude Wright, son of a Tulsa oil executive, and Allen Mayo, son of a hotel owner—testified they believed Kennamer was "crazy," and told of "stunts," such as walking around the sixteenth floor ledge of the Mayo Hotel and leaping from one automobile to another while traveling 50 miles an hour.

Believes Prisoner Sane.

"Claude, do you think Phil's sane or insane right here and now?" Wright was asked.

"I don't know just how to answer that question. I—I believe he's sane right now."

Miss Wilcox was the trump witness of the day. Her face all but hidden by a huge fur collar, the girl answered questions in a subdued voice and occasionally bit her lip at questions by A. Flint Moss, chief of Kennamer's defense staff.

Kennamer claims Gorrell had conceived an extortion plot against the Wilcoxes which placed Virginia Wilcox in danger. The defense claims that his love for the girl goaded him into a frenzy in which he knew not right from wrong and led him to slay Gorrell.

Congress Asked To Tighten Law On Liquor Here

fine or 60 days in jail, or both, for a second offense, and $500 fine or six months in jail for the third offense, or both. The present penalty is $100 fine or 30 days in jail or both, for all offenses.

The liquor board also seeks authority to impose suspensions of licenses in lesser offenses against the regulations. Chairman George W. Offutt pointed out that the only power now possessed by the board is to revoke licenses, which, he said, in many cases, is too harsh.

Power Over Licenses.

He proposed that the board be empowered to suspend licenses for 30 days without right to appeal to the Commissioners; for a suspension of over 30 days, the licensee would have the right of appeal to the Commissioners.

In the past, where the board has felt that revocation would be too severe, the assistant corporation counsel has recommended fines in Police Court. "The Police Court," Offutt said, "has shown its unwillingness to cooperate with us on this plan, and it is essential, in order to produce the rule of conduct which the board insists upon, to have this additional power."

Another amendment is being drafted by the corporation counsel's office which would authorize the confiscation of automobiles and other vehicles used for the transportation of liquor on which the tax has not been paid.

U. S. Production Plan Opposed by Rectifiers

Unanimous opposition to the Federal Alcohol Control Administration's plan to limit and allocate production, cease issuing new permits or revoke inactive permits for liquor rectifiers was expressed yesterday at a hearing by the administration.

"The drinking habits of the American people are not yet determined," said Dr. J. M. Doran, supervisor of the Distiller Code Authority, the Associated Press says. He said it would be "folly" to attempt to limit production or curtail expansion in the rectifying industry.

This view was expressed after the administration offered data that production of liquor this year would exceed the maximum demand by more than 2 to 1. Administrator Joseph H. Choate, jr., estimated consumption at 141,411,712 gallons, and potential production at 349,053,969 gallons.

Dr. Doran questioned the correctness of the estimates.

Most of the 150 representatives of distillers and rectifiers said more attention should be devoted to wiping out bootleg competition.

The speakers said blended liquor was returning to popularity in this country after suffering disfavor as a result of prohibition.

Senate Votes Probe Of NRA 'Monopoly'

ate Audit Committee to approve $5,000, is specifically aimed at four points. They are:

Whether the national industrial recovery act has encouraged or promoted monopolistic practices.

Whether the NRA, or rules, regulations and codes issued under it have tended to nullify the antitrust laws.

Whether, if that is true, legislation is needed to restore the antitrust laws to the position which they occupied prior to the NRA.

Whether antitrust laws, if properly enforced, are adequate to control monopolistic practices.

Although fostered monopoly is the alleged abuse specifically aimed at in the resolution, both Senator Borah and Senator King say the inquiry can be made broad enough to encompass most of the ground covered by the recovery agency.

The Idahoan is particularly anxious to bring under analysis the report of the Darrow board, charging NRA was crushing small business.

For Thorough Investigation.

Both Senators Nye and McCarran, while willing to cooperate in the Judiciary sub-committee inquiry, want to forestall a perfunctory hearing by the Finance Committee on their own resolution, if and when one is held. They said they will not be satisfied to hear testimony alone from selected NRA officials, confined largely to the Administration's NRA extension plans.

Col. F. M. Curlee, of counsel for the Industrial Recovery Association of Clothing Manufacturers, last night wrote Senators Nye and McCarran of "the complete cooperation of the association in every way."

"The honest element in every industry will profoundly welcome the proposed investigation," Col. Curlee said.

Senator Nye said last night that night letters have been sent to 500 firms representing the "outstanding instances of NRA oppression" that had come to his knowledge. He said 460 replies have been received, and only two indicated an improvement. He said 20 of the letters were not delivered because the firms had gone out of business.

Saito's Protest Reported On Pending State Laws

Tokyo, Feb. 15 (AP).—Rengo (Japanese) News Agency said today the foreign office had been advised that Hirosi Saito, Japanese Ambassador at Washington, has made representations to the State Department concerning anti-Japanese legislation reported pending in the Legislatures of Arizona and other States.

The representations were made, Rengo learned, when Saito called on Undersecretary of State William Phillips yesterday.

Bloodhound Trailed by Police

Coal of Revenue Commissioner Taylor at Fredericksburg Disappears Along With Canine Watchman; Animal Is Recovered.

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.)—Commissioner of Revenue S. Taylor Scott doesn't think so much of his prize bloodhound dog as a night watchman but he hopes that the dog may turn into a very good animal for chasing down escaped convicts. Police recovered the dog yesterday morning after it had been reported stolen from Mr. Scott's home.

Mr. Scott purchased the dog, a full-blooded bloodhound with long, flapping ears, as both a pet and a protection. For some time Mr. Scott had been missing coal from the bin in his cellar, so the dog was given a bed by the coal pile.

The coal continued to disappear each night and one morning this week Mr. Scott went into the cellar to find both coal and the dog gone.

Chief S. B. Perry and Game Warden P. Blake Lewis recovered the dog from a group of colored youths who allegedly had led the animal away from its bed beside the coal bin.

Dairy Leaders Delay Support Of Milk Control

Committee to Study Proposal Appointed in Session at Rockville.

The milk bill sponsored by Gov. Nice's milk control committee was discussed at length yesterday at a meeting of milk producer-distributors held at the Rockville courthouse. County Agent O. W. Anderson presided.

The bill was explained by William Flamm, of Gaithersburg, a member of the committee, who told the milk men that it would be a boon to them in destroying cutthroat competition. Dr. V. L. Ellicott, county health officer, announced he is trying to secure a 90 per cent, or more, rating for Montgomery County and that it will be necessary to have physical inspection of the cows and herds. He is endeavoring to have this work done without cost, he said.

The meeting adopted a resolution empowering Chairman Anderson to name a committee of five to study the milk bill and report back with recommendations. Those named were Chester Clagett, chairman; M. Cissell, N. O. Terpening, Mrs. E. A. Hills and A. Cissel.

The milk bill establishes a commission to control and regulate the milk industry in Maryland and would provide a method of legalizing price-fixing agreements, as well as abolish other unfair competition. The bill is pending in the General Assembly.

Students at Hood To Visit Goucher

Basket Ball Games Scheduled for Today.

Frederick, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—Students from Hood College will go to Goucher College, Baltimore, tomorrow to take part in the annual Play Day with that college and a group representing George Washington University, of Washington. Basket ball games will be played in the Forest Park High School.

Each class will be represented by eight girls who will participate in games with girls from corresponding classes of the other schools. Officials sponsoring the activities point out that the spirit of Play Day is for social enjoyment rather than the fostering of competition. Goucher will entertain the visiting teams at dinner.

Both this Play Day and the similar event, when students of Goucher and George Washington are guests of Hood College, are yearly affairs. Miss Ruth E. Perry, Miss Ellen Hume Jervey and Miss Claramond Harper will accompany the Frederick group to Baltimore. Miss Katherine Traver, Hood College basket ball manager, will have charge of arrangements.

20,000 Groups Plan to Honor P.-T.A. Founder

Organization Marks 38th Birthday Tomorrow; Started in D. C.

Celebrating the thirty-eighth birthday of the founding of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, more than 20,000 parent-teacher organizations throughout the Nation will observe Founders' Day tomorrow.

Mrs. B. F. Langworthy, of Chicago, National president, will pay tribute to Mrs. Phoebe Apperson Hearst and Mrs. Alice M. Birney, the founders, who, on February 17, 1897, called the first National Congress of Mothers together here. From this nucleus has grown the P.-T. A. organization, which has, today, 1,500,000 members.

Mrs. Roosevelt yesterday expressed her interest in P.-T. A. work in the following statement:

"I feel that in the 38 years since the National Congress of Parents and Teachers has been founded, much of value to our children has been accomplished, which would otherwise have been impossible.

"The cooperation of parents and teachers is an absolute necessity, if we are to accomplish what we wish for the youth of the future. Therefore, on this day, I wish you continued success for the good of the Nation's children."

Shipbuilder Is Sued By Hotel for $1,805

Lawrence Wilder, described as a shipbuilder, was sued for alleged unpaid board bill amounting to $1,805 in the District Supreme Court yesterday. The Shoreham Hotel was the complainant.

According to a suit filed by William E. Furey, attorney, Wilder owed for meals, advances and valet service between October 18, 1932, and February 6, 1933.

Sheriff's 'Army' of 200 Routs Pickets at Gold Mine in West

Jackson, Calif., Feb. 15 (AP).—Gun-bearing citizens led by sheriff's officers routed pickets at the gates of two famous gold mines here today and then completed the destruction of a strikers' camp, which in the meantime had been mysteriously set ablaze.

About 120 pickets, participants in labor troubles which had virtually paralyzed Jackson's only industry for five months, scattered before the advancing "army" of 200 or more.

The armed citizens then moved on to Amador City nearby. Finding no pickets there, they returned to Kennedy Flat, site of the strikers' camp.

Picket headquarters, consisting of a large tent, already was burning. Officers were reticent, but indicated the headquarters had been fired during the night by "vigilantes."

The sheriff's "army" then went into action again. Stoves, chairs, tables, boxes—everything that had been collected by pickets in the vicinity—were thrown into the blazing ruins of strike headquarters.

Soon nothing remained of the camp and no pickets were in evidence. For the first time in months a shift of 30 men went to their jobs in the Argonaut mine without passing a jeering line of striking men.

Each bearing either a shotgun, a pistol or a rifle, the citizens had gathered at the historic Amador County Courthouse.

In 40 automobiles the volunteers sped down a hill and to a point where pickets had set up headquarters on roads leading to both the Argonaut and Kennedy mines.

"Get going!" the pickets were told. The pickets scattered.

About five months ago mine workers began a strike for higher wages and union recognition. Eventually it embraced the four largest mines here, including the Argonaut and Kennedy.

The Argonaut finally reopened with 45 workers after its operators had declined to recognize the union. Yesterday the non-union workers were pelted with rocks and eggs. Five persons were arrested.

Hitler Reply to Treaty Bid

Berlin, Feb. 15 (AP).—The German Government tonight advised France and England that Germany had "a sincere desire to promote the safeguarding of peace" and that European questions raised in the recent London conversations will be thoroughly examined.

The text of the German reply follows:

Germany is in agreement with the British and French governments in a sincere desire to promote the safeguarding of peace, the maintenance of which is in the interests of Germany's security as well as in the interests of the security of other European states.

The German Government welcomes the spirit of trustful discussion between the individual governments which animates the reports from the British and French governments.

Will Study Documents.

The German government will thoroughly examine the whole documents concerning the European questions contained in them. This examination will be conducted in the spirit of a sincere desire for peace as well as a concern for the security of the German Reich in its geographically especially exposed situation in the heart of Europe.

The German government will especially examine the question raised of with what means the danger of air armaments can be avoided in the future, which danger has arisen from the abandonment by the heavily armed states of disarmament as prescribed by treaties.

The German government is convinced that only the spirit of free agreements between sovereign states as expressed in the Franco-British communique can lead to durable international regulations in the realm of armaments.

The German government welcomes the proposition to increase security against sudden attack from the air by a convention to be made as soon as possible which shall provide for the immediate employment of the air forces of the signatories in favor of the victim of an unprovoked air attack.

Ready to Use Air Force.

The German government is ready in principle to employ its air force as a means of deterring disturbances of the peace.

It is therefore willing to seek, in free accord with the powers concerned, ways and means by which such a convention can be realized, which shall guarantee the fullest possible security to all signatories.

The German government is of the opinion that negotiations on a large scale, which have not been sufficiently prepared, lead naturally and from experience to friction which in the interest of working out such a completely novel air convention should be avoided.

Before the German government participates in such negotiations, it believes it is desirable to clear up a series of basic preliminary questions by means of individual discussions with the governments concerned.

It would therefore welcome it if—after preliminary Franco-British discussions—the British government were first to declare its readiness (as a partner of the London discussions which is, at the same time, the guarantor of the Locarno pact) to enter into a direct exchange of views with the German government.

The German government is in accord with the British and French governments in the view that the conclusion of an air convention would be an important step on the road to the solidarity of the European states, and may well be suitable to lead to a solution satisfactory to all the other European problems."

Virginia Invites Highway Bids

Contracts to Be Awarded for Eight Roads and One Bridge.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—Bids on eight roads and one bridge-building project, to be submitted before March 7, were called for today by the State highway department.

The bridge is 110 feet in length, on State Route 501, over Beaver Creek, in Campbell County, 3 miles from Rustburg.

Among the road projects are:

Route 1—Caroline County, 1 mile of concrete from .8 of a mile south of Golansville to 4.5 miles north of North Anna River.

Route 11—Rockingham County, .3 of a mile of macadam in Harrisonburg.

governments in the view that the conclusion of an air convention would be an important step on the road to the solidarity of the European states, and may well be suitable to lead to a solution satisfactory to all the other European problems."

Reply Evasive, Says France

Paris, Feb. 15 (AP).—Authoritative French quarters said tonight Germany's reply to the Franco-British communique on European security evades most of the issues, although "it leaves the door open" for further negotiations.

The French insist the questions of Austrian independence as handled in the Rome accords, German return to the league, and an Eastern Locarno must be solved simultaneously. Germany was accused of being eager only for an air alliance while other problems were pushed off with a vague promise to examine them at a later date.

The German statement that the Reich was ready in principle to use her air force to help stop eventual disturbers of peace was described as an open admission that she now has an air force, contrary to the peace treaty.

Bus Line Asks A New Statute At Alexandria

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The city council last night heard arguments of representatives of the Monumental Lines, Inc., a new bus line, which is asking the repeal of the city ordinance regulating bus routes and the substitution of a more liberal ordinance and of the Alexandria, Barcroft & Washington Transit Co., the existing line, against the proposed change.

Attorney Harry F. Kennedy, representing the Monumental Lines, presented petitions signed, he said, by 2,800 persons, and said another petition of 400 names had been lost. Gardner L. Boothe, representing the A. B. & A. Co., submitted a satchel which he said contained 3,600 cards signed by commuters, stating the present service is satisfactory and asking that the Monumental petition be denied.

Judge John W. Price, general counsel of the Monumental Lines, submitted to council members two principal routes which he said would not conflict with the route now followed by the A. B. & A., but would use Cameron and Prince streets while the A. B. & A. would continue the use of King street. It is the purpose of the new company, he said, to develop new traffic, and argued that if his company did not render satisfactory service it would be compelled to retire. They propose to inaugurate the service with 13 new buses, he said, to be supplemented later as business conditions might justify, and the company has an investment of approximately $250,000. He said traffic experts from the company building the buses had made a traffic survey, and an independent survey had been made by his company which demonstrated the fact that there is room for two bus lines.

Attorney Boothe ridiculed the statement that there would be no competition if a new bus line is permitted to come to Alexandria, and stated that if the new line has sufficient financial resources, and was willing to continue in business long enough it would spell ruin to the owner of the present line, and asked whether the old company means enough to the City of Alexandria to permit such a condition to arise. The A. B. & A., he said, employs 118 men, representing approximately 350 persons, 97 per cent of whom live in Alexandria, 10 per cent own their homes, and the balance pay an average of $35 a month rent. The company, he said, during 1934 purchased in Virginia 494,467 gallons of gasoline, paying the Virginia tax, a part of which went to the City of Alexandria. The company operates 60 buses, and has an investment of $287,000. If the ordinance in question is repealed, he said, this would leave the field open to any person who could operate one bus, and neither the City of Alexandria nor the State corporation commission would have authority to regulate their operations.

The hearing was held in the corporation court room, which was packed to its utmost capacity.

Mayor E. C. Davison, who presided, stated that this was not an adjourned meeting of the council, as some seemed to infer, but merely a hearing, and that the matter of repealing or amending the ordinance would have to be taken up at a regular meeting of the council; that any ordinance to repeal or amend the present ordinance would have to be submitted by a member of the council.

Clarence Phillips, of the Carnegie Endowment on Peace, delivered an illustrated lecture entitled "Glimpses of Europe" as a part of the Valentine Day program of the Alexandria Kiwanis Club in the George Mason Hotel Thursday night. Among the subjects shown was the ancestral home of the Washington family, Sulgrave Manor, in England. Mr. Phillips also spoke briefly on Paris, Vienna, Rome and Geneva.

Another feature was the program of dances given by Misses Lillian Hoffman, Ruth Hobbeger, Mae Jacobs and Doris Hudson, and "Bugle Corps," by the group of entertainers as a finale. Miss Lucia Collins gave a piano solo.

Harry Kennedy was in charge of the program, and awarded booster prizes to Mrs. H. E. Cross, Miss Mary Augusta Cowman and Mrs. G. F. Birrell. The program was followed by a dance.

The Public Utility Commission, of Washington, yesterday granted permission to the A. B. & W. bus line to operate its buses over the Memorial bridge and through to Constitution avenue during the rush hours, for the convenience of the Virginia patrons employed in Washington. Robert L. May, president of the line, has announced that this service will be laced in operation in the next few days.

The city officials who were reelected at the last meeting of the city council were sworn in yesterday by Elliott F. Hoffman, clerk of the corporation court. They were: Emmett C. Dunn, city manager; Carl L. Budwesky, city attorney; W. R. Purvis Taylor, city collector and clerk to the city council, and Charles H. Jett, city auditor.

Robert Grandville McCollum, 19 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert P. McCollum, of Lorton, died yesterday in the Alexandria Hospital after an illness of three weeks, of peritonitis. He was born in Louisville, Ky., and, besides his parents, is survived by a sister, Miss Courtney McCollum.

The body was taken to the home of his parents, and the funeral will be held at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, from the Baptist Church at Woodbridge. The funeral procession will leave the home at 2:30 o'clock. Interment will be in Pohick Cemetery.

Festival Set for Fall.

Prince Georges Finds Increase In Baby Deaths

Rate Up, but Is Lower Than in Previous Years, Hooton Reveals.

While showing a slight increase in 1934, infant mortality in Prince Georges County during the past two years was considerably lower than in previous years, Dr. A. B. Hooton, county health officer, announced yesterday in submitting his annual report at Upper Marlboro.

In the scale of measurement, the rate during 1933 was 59.2 per thousand. In 1934 it was 68.7 per thousand. In 1931 the rate was 86.7; and in 1932 was 87.

A gold seal certificate was awarded the county for health work done in connection with Negro Health Week. This is the second such award received in the last two years.

Sheriff Stanley Woolf and Commonwealth Attorney C. W. Carter are assisting Dr. Davis with the investigation.

Arlington Board Is Accused Of Inactivity on Bridge Job

Clarendon Men's Group Charges Lack of Cooperation With State Road Board in Getting Rights of Way on Approach.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

An attack on the Arlington County board for its failure to cooperate with the State Highway Department toward obtaining rights of way for the Lee boulevard approach to the Arlington Memorial highway was made last night by the Clarendon Business and Professional Men's Association.

It was said that more than seven years ago the right of way from the bridge to Falls Church was assured the State. The right of way obtained at present ends in a field in Lyon Park, and it is not known when it will be possible to get the right from this point to the bridge.

In an effort to relieve traffic congestion in the business section of Clarendon, the association voted to confer with the owner of the vacant property on the south side of the boulevard, near Virginia avenue, with the view of creating a public parking space.

H. W. Beattie, chairman of the street lighting committee, reported that an item covering cost of installation of modern street lights along Wilson boulevard from Rosslyn to Clarendon avenue will be included in next year's budget by the county board.

He stated this will be the beginning of a county-wide street lighting system to replace the present lights.

I. C. Warner, chairman of the special committee arranging for the get-together dinner, announced the affair will be at 6:30 o'clock, March 6, in the Odd Fellows Hall at Clarendon. Other members of the committee are H. W. Beattie, Samuel Cohen and T. E. McDonough.

President George M. Yeatman announced the appointment of I. C. Warner and H. W. Beattie to study the question of the telephone rates between Clarendon and Alexandria.

The association voted to take up with Commissioner of Revenue Harry K. Green the question of licenses for out-of-town persons selling bread, and also dairies said to be delivering milk in the county. It was pointed out that failure to tax such trade was not fair to residents in business in the county who are paying for licenses.

Opposition to primaries or conventions for selection of party candidates for county posts was voiced last night by a committee of the Arlington County Civic Federation studying the question.

The committee indorsed a resolution to this effect presented by W. C. Hull, federation member, who is an executive assistant to the United States Civil Service Commission.

After discussion, Chairman I. C. Buchanan announced the resolution and recommendations that a conference be held with committees of both the Democratic and Republican parties in an effort to prevent either party from holding a primary or convention will be submitted to the federation at its March meeting.

Mrs. Ruby G. Simpson, Harry A. Fellows and Hugh J. McGrath, members of a committee which helped obtain the executive order permitting Federal employes to participate in local elections, were unanimous in their report the Civil Service Commission had been assured local elections in Arlington County were of a non-partisan character.

The county Democratic executive group has announced its intention of holding a primary to select county officers August 6.

It is pointed out holding of a Democratic primary, thus drawing party lines, will affect approximately 3,000 Federal employes who, according to the civil service regulations, are not allowed to participate in partisan politics.

Judge Walter T. McCarthy, of the Circuit Court of Arlington County, has appointed these members of the jury commission: Samuel C. Leizear, Frank H. Bailey, J. Lee Price, R. P. Shepherd and R. A. Crenshaw.

The commission will certify a list of 300 persons who will serve during the year as jurors in the Circuit Court.

The Rev. Perry L. Mitchell, pastor, will conduct services at the Clarendon Baptist Church tomorrow. In the morning his subject will be "Challenge of Prayer." At night he will speak on "A Daughter-in-Law's Devotion." Tableaux will supplement the talk.

Emery N. Hosmer was elected chairman of the Arlington Precinct Democratic Club last night. Other officers are David R. White, vice chairman, and Richard Reed, secretary-treasurer.

The club will meet Friday night, when committees will be appointed and plans made for the coming county election.

The Lyon Park Woman's Club will hold a Valentine dance in the Community Hall tonight. Mrs. J. W. Dorsey heads the arrangements committee.

The Catholic Woman's Club of Arlington County will hold a bake sale today in the offices of W. H. Beattie, on Wilson boulevard, at Clarendon.

Directors Abandon Fight on Dividends

Richmond, Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—Directors of the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., meeting here today, decided not to appeal from a ruling of Judge Ernest H. Wells, of Hustings Court, directing them to declare a dividend of $7 on each share of prior preference stock outstanding in the hands of the public.

Unless an appeal is taken by some one other than the corporation, the dividend will be declared at the next meeting of the board, it was announced. The disbursement will amount to approximately $390,000.

Luray, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—Floyd Rhinehart has been appointed by the board of supervisors as superintendent of the county poor farm in Marksville district. He takes the place of John A. Cave, who died a month ago after having held the position seven years. Rhinehart, a farmer, lives near Alma.

Brothers Held For Grand Jury In Auto Death

Charles Ohland, 17, Driver of Car in Accident, Police Believe.

An apparent attempt of John A. Ohland, 26, Jamaica, N. Y., to shield his younger brother, Charles, 17, failed when a Prince Georges County coroner's jury early yesterday ordered both men held for the grand jury on manslaughter charges.

John Ohland, held for the death of Richard Anderson, 30, of Churchill, Va., testified he was driving the truck that collided with Anderson's vehicle at Beltsville, Md., last December 19.

Charles, whom police said had no driver's permit, testified he was asleep in his brother's truck at the time the vehicles crashed in a heavy rainstorm. He said they were on their way to Harrisonburg, Va.

State Police Corporal C. W. Cubbage, however, introduced a surprise witness, John W. Confer, of Beltsville, who declared he and other passersby took considerable time in extricating Charles from beneath the steering wheel of the wrecked truck. He received severe injuries.

The jury, sitting at Hyattsville before Acting Coroner George S. Phillips, of Berwyn, after a lengthy deliberation came to the following verdict:

"Richard Anderson met his death on the Washington-Baltimore boulevard at Beltsville, Md., on December 19, 1934, as the result of a fractured skull, received in a collision of two trucks. One truck was driven by Richard Anderson, the other, in the belief of the jury, was driven by Charles Ohland with permission of John Ohland, contrary to the testimony of both the said John Ohland and the said Charles Ohland. We recommend that Charles Ohland and John Ohland be held for the grand jury."

Corpl. Cubbage immediately swore to manslaughter warrants against the men. They were released on $1,000 bond each.

Alfred P. Thom Is Dead at 80; Rails' Counsel

Distinguished Attorney Had Retained Active Interest in Native Virginia.

Alfred Pembroke Thom, 80, one of the Nation's foremost railroad lawyers, died yesterday at his home, Pembroke Park, 3535 Van Ness street. He had been ill for some time.

At the time of his death Mr. Thom was associate general counsel of the Association of American Railroads. For years he was general counsel for preceding groups of this organization. These included the Association of Railway Executives and the American Railway Association. He relinquished his major duties only in recent years.

Born in Virginia.

Born in Northampton County, Va., in 1854, Mr. Thom was the son of William Alexander and Anne Parker Thom. He was educated in private schools, Richmond College and the University of Virginia, where he took the degree of doctor of laws.

In 1876 he was admitted to the bar, and from 1878 until 1905 he practiced in Norfolk. Meanwhile he served as receiver and general counsel for the Atlantic & Danville Railway, and from 1902 until 1905 as counsel in Virginia for the Southern.

Mr. Thom was appointed general counsel for the Southern in Washington in 1905, and remained in that capacity for the next 12 years, then becoming connected with the Association of Railway Executives.

Twice Married.

He was twice married. His first wife was the former Mrs. Virginia W. Baylor, whom he wed in 1881. They had one son, Alfred Pembroke Thom, jr., now assistant to the general counsel of the Association of American Railroads. The first Mrs. Thom died in 1916. Later Mr. Thom married Mrs. Jessie Gertrude Respass, who survives him.

An active interest in the affairs of his native State was maintained by Mr. Thom. He was a member of the Virginia Constitutional Convention in 1901-1902, and was president of the Virginia Bar Association in 1904-1905.

Mr. Thom was a member of the American Bar Association, the American Society of International Law, Beta Theta Pi Fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa, and the Metropolitan, Chevy Chase, Congressional and University Clubs here and the Virginian Club, in Norfolk.

Funeral services will be conducted at the home tomorrow at 3:30 p. m. by the Rev. Ze Barney T. Phillips, chaplain of the United States Senate. Burial will be in Norfolk at 11 a. m. Monday.

Col. Brown Not to Seek New Term in Virginia

Roanoke, Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—Col. J. Sinclair Brown, speaker of the House of Delegates, announced today he will not be a candidate for the House of Delegates from Roanoke County, thereby terminating his service of more than a score of years in the lower house of the assembly.

In a brief announcement the banker—he is in line for the presidency of the Virginia Bankers Association in June—stated he would not seek reelection, but would "continue to be interested in public affairs."

Board Issues Road Figures

Virginia High Type Mileage Totals 3,222 and Low Type 5,526.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—Even on the State's primary system the low-type roads still have a greater mileage than roads of high type, according to a statement from the State highway commission today.

This statement shows that on January 1 the primary system mileage completed and under construction totaled 5,526 miles for low-type roads, and 3,222 miles for roads of the higher type. Roads conditioned and now being reconditioned made an additional 810 miles, giving Virginia 9,538 miles in its primary highway system.

This, however, does not present the complete picture, for vast changes eventually will have to be made in the primary system. Even the broadest of the highways will have to be widened to meet increased traffic needs, as has been shown on the Richmond-Washington highway and the Richmond-Petersburg turnpike.

In addition, the highway department's plans as outlined last year call for the replacement and widening of hundreds of bridges.

In the list of low-type roads in the primary system, the statement shows only 272 miles that are unimproved. Roads that have gravel or soil surfaces which are untreated total 864 miles. The soil or gravel roads which have been given bituminous surface treatment have a mileage of 3,655.

Expert to Advise On Recreation Plan

Winchester, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—Information has been received that Dr. James B. Williams, of New York, nationally known authority on supervised recreation, will come to Frederick County soon to confer with Miss Helen Shockey, who has prepared a tentative program of recreation to embrace every community in the county.

So far as can be learned, Frederick will be the first county in Virginia where such a project has been undertaken. Miss Shockey proposed to have programs held in each schoolhouse simultaneously, with volunteers from civic organizations in charge.

Rural citizens will be given an opportunity for training in dramatics, music and handicraft. Literature and various amusements also will be introduced. The project is part of the local relief program.

Loudoun Farmer, 87 Today, Active

Ryan, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—C. W. Myers, one of Loudoun County's oldest active farmers, will celebrate his eighty-seventh birthday anniversary tomorrow by riding his horse as he has done with much enthusiasm in late years.

Myers, who manages his four farms of about 600 acres, attributes his health to the fact that he has always been a hard worker and has never had time to grow old.

He recalls John Brown's raid at Harpers Ferry by pointing out that he was a passenger on the Washington boat the morning after the skirmish. He was also taken prisoner in the Civil War.

Wade A. Siebenthal, Steel Official, Is Dead

Tucson, Ariz., Feb. 15 (AP).—Wade A. Siebenthal, 61, who during the World War was detailed by the United States Steel Co. to survey and develop manganese mines, died at his home here today.

Man Of The World.

Even when compressed into the small pica of Who's Who, the career of Elihu Root stands out to emphasize the fact that here, in the fullest sense of the word, is a man of the world. On the occasion of this elder statesman's ninetieth birthday it is fitting to give respectful consideration to his achievements.

As teacher, attorney, author or statesman it is apparent that Mr. Root has ordered his life with an eye toward the advancement of that vague but important science of politics on which so great a part of the world's harmony and security depends. From the time he was admitted to the bar in 1867, on through the years when he served successively as district attorney, Secretary of War under McKinley, Secretary of State under Theodore Roosevelt and United States Senator, until his appointment as a member of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague, his service has been characterized by an untiring effort to assist his country in the delicate business of playing its part in the international arena. Whether serving on an arbitration tribunal or representing his country in a diplomatic capacity, whether presiding at a national convention or simply lecturing before university undergraduates, his dominant theme has been peace and concord through intelligence and understanding.

It is no perfunctory exaggeration to describe his work, together with John Hay's, as the outstanding example of American efforts to formulate and practice a consistent foreign policy. The fullest expression of these efforts is seen in his long struggle to induce the United States to enter the World Court. As an aged man, for whom the quiet of retirement would regularly have been expected, he volunteered to arrange the protocols through which the differences of this country and the other nations were to be resolved.

That his painstaking work should have been rejected must be a bitter thought for him, all the more so because that rejection represents a triumph of demagoguery over responsible leadership. In spite of this, however, he stands forth as a foremost exemplar of sincerity in citizenship—a man of and for his country and, by the same token, of and for the world.

Adjusting Cotton Policies.

A policy of experimentation is practical only when it is accompanied by close observation, free criticism and a willingness to recognize and correct errors. Since the AAA is frankly described by the Administration as an experiment in the control of agriculture, it is quite appropriate that this agency should send Oscar G. Johnston abroad to investigate the results of its cotton program.

The unfortunate aspect of this inquiry is, of course, that the AAA delayed action until our cotton exports were drastically reduced. Critics called attention to the widening disparity between domestic and foreign cotton prices and increased production abroad more than a year ago. But the AAA went ahead with its domestic program on the assumption that foreign crop expansion would not be substantial. Recently the AAA has come to realize that an international agreement to stabilize the output of cotton will be necessary if existing prices are to be maintained without serious curtailment of our export market.

Presumably Mr. Johnston's mission is to convert the governments of Egypt, India and Brazil to cooperative control over cotton. As general manager of the AAA cotton producers' pool and one of the leading farmers of the South, he is well qualified to present the American viewpoint. But there are serious obstacles to an international agreement on cotton. Curtailment of the American crop has already taken place in an effort to remove the disastrous surplus accumulated by the ill-fated Farm Board. Foreign countries will be reluctant to forgo advantages they have already obtained as a result of the AAA program. By acting alone this country has lost a great deal of its bargaining power.

Moreover, some countries are planting cotton to relieve themselves from surpluses of other crops. Brazil, for example, is substituting cotton for coffee. Even Argentina, which is not usually considered as a cotton-producing country, is steadily expanding her acreage, partly because of the low prices of other agricultural commodities. A recent survey by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics indicates that the Argentine can expand her cotton crop by 2,000,000 acres. It is difficult to estimate what expansion may take place in China and Russia.

Significant changes in the AAA policy may be forthcoming, therefore, when Mr. Johnston concludes his survey. If an international agreement proves impractical, the United States will be forced to compete with foreign producers or gradually withdraw from the world market. Considering the upheaval that the latter policy would bring about in the South it can be contemplated only as a last resort.

Investigation Or Attack?

A resolution sponsored by Senators Nye and McCarran, containing a long list of charges against the NRA, has been referred to the Finance Committee. It takes the form of an indictment instead of an unprejudiced request to investigate the activities of the recovery administration.

Presumably the outcome of the inquiry will assist the committee to decide whether to recommend extension of the NRA for two more years. Another resolution reported from the Senate's Judiciary Committee calls for investigation of charges that the NRA has contributed to the growth of monopolies. In both instances an attitude of prosecution seems to supersede the desire for information.

Unquestionably, the NRA is in need of reform. Many codes have proved to be socially undesirable or unworkable. Others have been forgotten, or their provisions have been defied with impunity. Certain economic policies agreed upon by codified industries relating to price and production control have been discredited in some cases and justified in others. Consequently, a formidable task of selective overhauling and revision of the rules and regulations adopted under the NRA lies ahead. Policies need to be reformulated. The administrative organization should be accommodated to the exigencies of a new order. Above all, balanced judgments are required to salvage the good features of the NRA while eliminating the bad ones.

Sweeping denunciatory verdicts are out of place in view of the results obtained under the NRA. Large numbers of business men have expressed a strong desire to continue operating under codes, however critical they may be of specific practices. Desired reforms will not be assisted by intemperate congressional assaults upon an admittedly imperfect system. Business men and labor, too, have a right to expect that when a senatorial committee undertakes to change the existing law it will study the complex problems that have arisen without rancor and without being unduly influenced by hostile criticism.

When Senators inveigh against the monopolistic trend encouraged by the NRA they apparently forget that representatives of a good many small and medium-sized industries assert that their chief protection against loss of independence lies in a relaxation of the prohibitions of the antitrust laws made possible under code agreements. Similarly, complaints that high prices have been fostered and the public injured by various agreements designed to prevent destructive price cutting, sales below cost, etc., are defended in all sincerity by their advocates as a means of assuring lower prices in the long run. In brief, the diatribes launched against the NRA have to be taken with reservations, and evils weighed against benefits in a spirit of impartiality.

Ambitious efforts at industrial regimentation with inadequate preparation for the task assumed must inevitably fail in many respects. However, time is needed to correct mistakes and evolve a permanent policy that will conserve the good and discard the evil. From present indications the Senate is going about this task of revision most injudiciously.

The best way to deal with the NRA would be to extend its tenure of life temporarily, without substantial change, trusting that the new administrative agencies will gradually eliminate the worst abuses and assist Congress to formulate permanent legislation in the light of experience.

Far From Discouraging.

Recent developments on the chess-board of Europe reveal Hitler as an astute politician. Electing a gambit opening some months ago, he has repeatedly emphasized his nation's desire for peace, which protestations have been taken at little less than face value by France and Great Britain. Willing to sacrifice pawn for pawn, these latter players early in the month proffered arms equality in return for an agreement pledging mutual aid against aggressive attacks from the air, together with agreements guaranteeing stability in central Europe and maintenance of the eastern frontiers.

To this move Hitler now replies with consummate cunning: he sends only an oral answer indicating his hearty accord with the western air proposal but evading committal on the central European and eastern plans. By this strategy he leaves the matter open to diplomatic negotiations but not international conference, thus maintaining his relative position on the board and putting the next move up to London and Paris.

If little appears to have been accomplished thus far, at least the German point of view and probable course of action is clarified. England and France dangled arms equality before Germany as an inducement to enter the general convention; by her answer Germany indicates that arms equality is not an inducement or a concession, but is a prerequisite to any discussions at all. Furthermore, the vagueness of the answer as regards the proposed eastern pacts suggests that the ingrained German aversion to commitment or restriction on its eastern borders, which dates back to the days of Stresseman, still prevails. And the avoidance of the central European question demonstrates that Germany's hopes for an eventual Anschluss with Austria have not yet been abandoned.

Reactions in London and Paris indicate that neither foreign office is pessimistic, though the French are naturally disappointed by the German coolness to the eastern Locarno suggestion. The shrewd bargaining evinced by the Nazi government points to an underlying desire to effect some definite understandings with its European neighbors—always on a basis of equality, however. Such understandings are in all probability not to be reached in the immediate future, but the prospects for ultimate agreement are far from discouraging.

No Figs From Thistles.

Selection of Gen. Robert E. Wood as chief adviser to the Administration in working out its public works program indicates a commendable desire to coordinate this vast undertaking with the activities of private enterprise. If the group of business men to be headed by Gen. Wood makes an active study of projects and the general policies to be followed, its advice may be extremely valuable. Guidance from a body of this sort becomes all the more important because of the obscurity of the bill which Congress has been asked to pass.

The manner in which this board originated, however, tends to strengthen the widespread skepticism with which this bill is regarded. Secretary Roper says the plan was suggested to the President two weeks ago and was immediately approved. Apparently this means that the $4,880,000,000 public works-relief measure was sent to Congress while the question of what agency should formulate a program was just as vague as the question of how this fund should be spent. Such haphazard planning, where an enormous obligation against taxpayers is involved, can only intensify the apprehension of Congress and the public.

Several improvements have been made in the public works resolution since it was passed by the House. But all of the changes are of minor importance compared with the central objective of this extraordinary measure. The Senate Appropriations Committee made an earnest effort to analyze the Administration's program, but found it so inchoate that not even a general policy could be outlined in the resolution. No congressional committee can hope to transform a vague and undefined bill into a practical plan for the expenditure of nearly five billion dollars.

On several points the Appropriations Committee reversed previous decisions. The public works feature of the bill, its central objective, narrowly escaped excision. No clear-cut opinion on any provision was formulated. The committee merely floundered about in a morass of confusion and ignorance of the President's intentions. Finding no coherent reply to its demands for information as to how the fund would be spent, it finally succumbed to befuddlement and political pressure.

The hopeless task of trying to write a sound law to authorize an unplanned undertaking of gigantic proportions will now go forward on the floor of the Senate. Since that body will have no further information than was vouchsafed to the committee, there is not much hope that the basic weaknesses in this venture will be corrected. Congress can not make something out of nothing.

An Ounce Of Playwright.

"Broadway Explains Itself" meetings are being held in Brooklyn, a city which demands explanation of many manifestations of our civilization. At each gathering a playwright with a current show on Broadway relates where he got the initial idea for his play and how he worked it out. He tells whether the plot was conceived from a casual scene in the street; from a fragment of some anecdote, or from some personal experience of his own.

The dissection of the brain-children of playwrights has hitherto been regarded as the special prerogative of the critic. In many cases, the operation proves to be a major one. It takes a very hardened or a very wise playwright to regard such treatment as nothing more than a corrective measure for growing pains.

There are only three types of play possible—the gilded lily type, the tiger lily type, and the lily-of-the-valley type. The musical comedy, depending for its life on extravagant beauty and sparkle, belongs to the first pattern. The tiger lily plays are those in which sex rears its ugly head over a leopard skin. Sweetness and light are the essence of plays in the last category.

It is the purpose of these meetings in Brooklyn to determine whether an expectant playwright deliberately chooses a plot from one of these classes or if he simply shuts his eyes and picks one by the old eeny, meeny, miny, mo process. From the size of the crowds that are being turned away every week, it would appear that the public at least thinks an ounce of playwright is worth a pound of critic.

The Return of Mr. Lloyd George.

(From the Christian Science Monitor.)

For the last three years Mr. Lloyd George has been a dark horse in the political world. Since he refused to support the national government in 1931, and stood apart from both of the groups into which the Liberty Party became divided, he has taken little part in public life. He retired like Achilles to his tent, and there wrote the four volumes of his war memoirs.

And now he has announced his return. He counts upon rallying round himself and his program a few of the Liberals and a few of the Socialists; and may it not be that in the next Parliament—labor being stronger and the national government supporters weaker—he may find himself with a group of followers whose vote on either side would be the determining factor? If so, once again Mr. Lloyd George would be the virtual ruler of Britain. That appears to be the calculation. Mr. Lloyd George is as resourceful as ever. He may or may not succeed, but he will make British politics more exciting.

Let Japan Buy Manchuria.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The present attitude of Japan on the naval ratio problem for a vastly increased navy, together with her recent seizure of Manchuria and later gesture of seizure of other territory, constitutes a real menace to world peace.

But that menace could be overcome most easily if Japan would but adopt the good business principle of purchase rather than seizure. Purchase is always honorable, while robbery is despicable — whether it be a province or a sack of rice. If Japan would pay China for Manchuria and other desired territory, the civilized world would applaud and the menace of war would vanish; world navies would be quickly reduced, and a new era would dawn in civilization.

This is the policy of business men in daily mercantile affairs. This business-like policy would save Japan hundreds of millions in gold which huge naval and air forces would cost to build and maintain. That gold could more wisely be invested in needed provinces for her growing population. It is the honorable policy.

Real Community Spirit.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a reader of The Post for many years. Since the present management took over the paper I can't give you very much for your editorial policy, especially in reference to Maryland politics. For a good old Republican paper to be praising the Democratic leaders of Maryland gives me a pain.

But my hat is off to you in your decision to discontinue the sale of papers from racks. I have always thought the selling of papers that way a disgrace to any newspaper and indefensible from any angle.

Not only is it a very poor method of merchandising, but the system has contributed in a large degree to the generally untidy and unkempt condition of Washington streets. If the newspapers had been required to clean up their torn, wet, windblown papers the system would have been done away with long ago.

My congratulations to The Post. This is real community spirit and a great step in civic pride.

Prefers Italian System.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every real friend of the President should tenaciously oppose his wish, or his willingness to have dumped on him either the responsibility or the power of allocating the grotesque $4,880,000,000 fund. Its extravagance and absurdity are augmented by the assurance which has been given that the President, alone, will determine its distribution.

If he had no presidential duties, it would be obviously impossible for any one man to direct the expenditure of such a fabulous sum. No potentate on earth was ever burdened with such responsibility, or had conferred on him such power.

If conditions have made it impossible to operate under the Constitution, I greatly prefer a newly defined system resembling that of Italy, which will counteract the growing reliance on Government support and sternly direct the citizen to abandon his wealth-consuming practices, live within his means and support himself and an honest Government. We need Government honesty and providence as a necessary base for individual honesty and economic recovery.

Best Of Three.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I congratulate you on having the Post-Impressionist column among your daily features? I read three daily papers, and none of them has the stimulating variety and good-humored sophistication of this column. Indeed, I wonder why one of the New York sheets has not taken the writer from you. The stuff is never botchily written, and there is a wealth of subject matter.

Good luck to the columnist. And power to you both!

Printing And The Copyright Union.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your editorial of February 11 you stressed the advantage of the entry of the United States into the Copyright Union. Such action would not only obtain for our authors, as you point out, automatic protection for their works, without formality, in the 40 countries now within that union, but it would stimulate foreign authors to publish their works in the United States, thus making business for our publishers and work for our printers.

Prompt adherence now would avoid the delay involved in a preliminary discussion of copyright legislation and Congressional action could follow to secure the needed conformity between our laws and the treaty obligations.

Objection has been made by our printers to entry into the Copyright Union because it would add to unemployment by reason of the necessary abrogation of the present requirement to print British books here. Our own authors must continue to print here in order to secure copyright.

The obligation to print here must be done away with; the British authors privilege to do so remains, and entry into the Copyright Union, instead of diminishing American printing would increase it because of the greater publication of foreign works here, under the stimulus of the treaty.

In 1891 our law made American printing obligatory for all copyrighted books, including books in foreign languages. This last resulted in loss of printing instead of gain and in 1909 our printers with the acquiescence of James M. Lynch, president of the International Typographical Union, helped to amend our law so that obligatory American printing since that time has applied (so far as foreign authors are concerned) only to books in the English language published abroad.

The result no doubt has been increased printing of foreign-language literature, but the reduction of printing in this country to less than one-quarter of the books produced from year to year in England. The reason for this is quite understandable. The making of two editions (British and American) merely to obtain copyright for the book in this country, has involved too great a cost, and the British author has been obliged to let his American copyright go—to his own frequent monetary loss and to the certain loss of work for our printers.

Under the convention the British author's book would at once have full legal protection and he need no longer feel concern as to that matter; can take his own time and at his own convenience can arrange for the publication of his book over here and the production of an American printed edition. He would know that an American publisher is best equipped to distribute and sell his book in the United States. The American printer would find his reward in increased work.

Elderly Equines.

It has been asserted in the course of a hearing before the committee on military affairs of the General Assembly that some of the horses used by the Cavalry section of the Connecticut National Guard average about 18 years old, while there are a few equine veterans of 28 or 30. It is also intimated that some of the horses are second-hand, as it were, for, after the United States Army feels that they are too old for a strenuous life, it sends them to Connecticut. That, it strikes one, is kind on the part of Uncle Sam, and one trusts the horses take kindly to facing old age in this State.

The screen has given many of us an opportunity to witness Cavalry maneuvers without getting in the way of the mounted troops. We have seen horses and their riders taking hedges, fences and ditches with ease, stopping at nothing short of a suburban bungalow, but now that one hears the statements made at the hearings we have doubts that are disturbing. One may now wonder if one of these elderly steeds could leap over a tennis net with any degree of safety. Is there an Old Horses' Home, and is it within the borders of the State?

The impression has grown that the horse in warfare is out of date and that the world would never see a battle won or lost by a Cavalry charge, but if the United States has Cavalry there must be something for it to do. If so, there ought to be horses young enough to do it. Those now in service are almost old enough to attend a reunion of Spanish-American War veterans.

Laureate's Truth.

Reviewing the "Colloquies" of Robert Southey, then the poet laureate of England, Lord Macaulay in the January of 1830—just 105 years ago—wrote:

"It is not by the intermeddling of Mr. Southey's idol, the omniscient and omnipotent State, but by the prudence and energy of the people, that England has hitherto been carried forward in civilization; and it is to the same prudence and energy that we now look with comfort and good hope. Our rulers will best promote the improvement of the nation by strictly confining themselves to their own legitimate duties, by leaving capital to find its most lucrative course, commodities their fair price, industry and intelligence their natural reward, idleness and folly their natural punishment, by maintaining peace, by defending property, by diminishing the price of law and by observing strict economy in every department of the state.

"Let the government do this; the people will assuredly do the rest."

The Post Impressionist

Negus Negust.

Post Office, Saturday.

SLIGHTLY mistaken are those among our learned contemporaries who speak of the row between Italy and Abyssinia as "a dispute between a Christian nation and a Mohammedan."

Abyssinia is a Christian country.

In fact, the Abyssinian Church is one of the oldest of Christian churches. It is almost as old as the Eastern Orthodox Church from which the Abyssinians separated in 451.

Haile Selassie, the present monarch of Shoa, Emperor of Ethiopia, Lion of Judah and Negus Negust or King of Kings—to give him no more of his titles—is not only a blood relation of Menelik II, who worsted—who, indeed, annihilated—an Italian army in the little 1896 unpleasantness. He asserts, like Menelik and all of his forefathers—asserts with some show of reason, too—that the family descends from the Queen of Sheba who "heard of the fame of Solomon" and visited his court. Haile Selaisse seized the throne from his predecessor, Lij Yasu, exactly because the latter abjured Christianity and announced his intention of embracing Mohammedanism. And the State Church, the religion of the country, is derived from the Coptic Church of Egypt.

The Egyptian people of that faith are the last remaining remnant of the ancient Egyptians. Their ecclesiastical language is the language of the Pharaohs. All that is left of the old "learning and lineage" of the Nile is compressed within their narrow limits.

But, as Christians, they are accounted heretics by both the Eastern and Western Churches. Although by denying Christ's human nature to stress His divinity, the old Coptic heresy is only an exaggeration of the orthodoxy of St. Athanasius and St. Cyril, the African Monophysites clung so close to their error as to choose a material surrender to Saracen rule rather than a spiritual alliance with Constantinople.

Christianity was sent to Abyssina in the Fourth Century by the (Orthodox) Chuch of Alexandria. The Abyssinians became Monophysites with the Copts in the Fifth Century. At last the westward growth of the Mohammedan power isolated the Abyssinians completely. They have ever since been isolated, though latterly of their own will. They had then to consecrate the heads of their sect by the imposition of their first Patriarch's mummified hand; that hand is still employed for this purpose.

The Coptic Church has its peculiarities and, in addition, preserves many a feature of the Jewish ritual. There was, and is, the kiss exchanged throughout the congregation, as among the Armenian Christians, the employment, also, of children as deacons. There was, and is, the head-covering of all worshipers, their feet unshod.

The Abyssinian Church has gone further. The loud shrieks that Herodotus heard at Egyptian funerals are heard today at every funeral in Ethiopia. In the services of its faith, the center of devotion is the Ark of the Covenant, called the Ark of Zion, on which gifts are laid, to which prayers are addressed. There are sacred dances. Both the Jewish Sabbath and the Christian Sunday are observed. Circumcision is practiced. The flesh of swine is forbidden; the "sinew that shrank," may not be eaten.

Not Easter, or Christmas, but the Epiphany, is the greatest festival among the Abyssinians; then there occurs a general lustration of the people, which some ill-informed observers have confused with a re-baptism. Pilate, moreover, is a Saint in the Ethiopian calendar—because he "found no fault" in his Prisoner.

One amateur theologian concludes somewhat thus a summary of the Abyssinian creed:

That faith, sealed by baptism after fasting and compensatory alms, is enough for justification; that the unbaptized are not saved and that the Saints should be invoked because ordinary sinful mortals are unworthy to plead for themselves——

But that sins must be confessed to a priest and, through him, absolution secured from above; that every sin is pardoned upon a devout pilgrimage to Jerusalem; and that, though prayers for the faithful dead are obligatory, there is, between death and salvation, an intermediate period (apparently not precisely a Purgatory) the length of which depends upon the good works done during life on earth.

Abyssinia changes slowly and little. She is a compound of pride and humility, of meekness and ferocity, of old learning and what often seems to be the eternal reverse.

But her people outrank the other self-governing natives of Africa—outrank most of them that are governed by Europeans—in social condition, in agriculture, in the laws and in the arts.

And, as you see, they are not Mohammedans.

Satevepost John Doe Identified By Death

New York Discovers Van Brunt, Hears Sally Rand And Hunts Alligators.

By Ralph E. Renaud.
(Special Correspondence of The Post).

New York.

THERE is only one profession wherein tremendous celebrity may be achieved with complete anonymity. Newspaper work is supposed to be anonymous but when the reporter stands out a bit the city editor tosses him a signature. Editorials are unsigned, but everyone knows the great editorial writers of the country. A radio announcer of parts soon becomes a magnetized name. The one exception is the profession of the model.

The artist signs himself, never the model. The model, in his own form and features, may stand in the courthouse square supporting the whole bronze world on his shoulders, yet nobody knows him. The model's face may be duplicated as countless thousands of magazine covers yet she moves about unrecognized by the crowd. She may smile a hundred times for tooth paste, cigarettes or face cream and still remain the Forgotten Girl.

One such model, perhaps the most widely reproduced of any, has just died on Long Island. Millions saw his face and figure repeatedly on the cover of the Saturday Evening Post. Norman Rockwell painted him many times. J. C. Leyendecker used him over and over again. Yet to everyone who admired the paintings the subject was merely John Doe.

• • • •

HIS real name was James K. Van Brunt and he was 85 years old. Mr. Rockwell used him as a model for his oft-repeated figure of "the world-weary, abused little man." The pathetic stoop of his 5 feet 2 inches and his drooping mustache excited many a sympathetic smile. Rockwell won a medal by depicting Van Brunt as a tramp toasting frankfurters over a jungle fire. One of Leyendecker's best covers showed Van Brunt as a mannequin helpless in the clutch of a large and determined wife pinning up a new party dress on him. He has often fished from model platforms or smoked his corncob pipe, to blaze out later in full color as the epitome of Mr. Common Man.

Yet Van Brunt wasn't that kind of a man at all. He wasn't a bit meek. He was a drummer boy in the Civil War and in later years often used to bang away merrily on the same drum. He was a lieutenant in the Spanish-American War and tried hard to enlist in the World War. When they wouldn't take him on account of his age he popped up as a lieutenant in the auxiliary police and militia.

HE did not become a model until he was around 75. Before that he mostly did odd jobs, except when there was a war floating around. Norman Rockwell, remembering his pathetic shoulders and his luxuriant mustache, shot him into a kind of anonymous fame with his medal-winning tramp picture. With a certain prosperity, suppressed desires began to seep to the surface and the old man blossomed out into vivid clothes, quite unsuited to his pictures. He also became addicted to mentioning that he and Napoleon were of an exact height.

Once, for pictorial purposes, Rockwell begged him to shave off his mustache.

"I've been most of my life raising that," reflected the old model, "but here goes."

And off it went. But he earned $10 losing it and cultivated a new one to boot.

IT looks as though Sally Rand meant to incorporate her fans and bubbles. She astonished a meeting of New York executives the other day, not by dancing for them, which would have been no surprise, but by handing them a sales talk which might have come from the head of a department store.

"I realized at the outset," the cool little blonde informed them, "that 90 per cent of the merchandise that is sold in this country is sold to women; that sales talks, for that reason, must be directed at women. In my case, that fact presented obvious difficulties.

"Still, I believed I had something salable. So I decided to advertise, since advertising is the secret of successful merchandising."

She selected Chicago as her market and the World's Fair as her platform, so to speak. "There were more potential buyers there," she explained. As the trade stimulus of the fair, raids and what not began to wear off she bought "specialized training" and proceeded to organize it. This included other girls, an orchestra and balloons big enough to conceal yet translucent enough to reveal. It also included a press agent.

For the rest of Miss Rand's excursion into the terminology of big business please consult her press agent. She certainly got a smart one.

NEW YORK has often been described as a human zoo. But it doesn't stop there. The most extraordinary and unexpected animals are always cropping up in the most amazing places. By no means all of them escape from Bronx Park, either, though a python, a honey bear, or a playful chimpanzee have at various times wandered from their happy homes up there.

The latest zoological specimen to emerge into the pulsing life of the metropolis is, or was, a denizen of the underworld. He was an 8-foot alligator living in a sewer, and his size and weight indicate that he must have maintained a residence there for some time. The episode happened, not in the Bronx, where so many strange things happen, but in Harlem.

Four boys shoveling snow into a sewer noticed something swishing around in the manhole. One of them ran home and fetched his mother's clothesline, a stout one as it proved. Then they made a slip noose and swung it over the reptile's tail.

The alligator didn't like it much, but came to the surface anyway. There he put up a pretty good fight, even though he was well iced at the time. Four shovels and the shouted directions of many kibitzers proved too much for him. The four St. Georges dragged him away as a trophy of big game hunting in darkest Harlem. Now he is on exhibition at a barber shop to prove that anybody, any time, can have a close shave in New York.

• • • •

SPEAKING of St. Georges suggests that they have turned up a forge in Long Island City where sixteenth century fighting blades are wrought, possibly for use against wandering alligators. It takes six hours to make a sword and they say the blades are as good as any that ever came out of Toledo or Milan.

A few days ago the members of the Armor and Arms Club watched Kenneth Lynch, the master smith, pound out a cherry red weapon. His workmen stood beneath a sign which read:

"Well come ye men at armes and fellow craftsmen to ply thy talents earnestly in mine armorie of light and air. What we do, we shall do our best in thy name—Old Soldier."

It all seems part of a movement to make the world more smith-conscious, though plowshares seem more popular just at the moment than swords.

The League for a Woman President has opened permanent headquarters in Brooklyn. Miss Lillian D. Rock, vice president of the National Association of Women Lawyers, is its sponsor and she says there is already an enrolled membership of 3,000 men and women, which she expects to be 300,000 within a year.

There is a slight preponderance of women in the United States. Provided that they become sufficiently sex-conscious they can certainly elect a woman President, if they can get her nominated. Miss Rock claims that there are plenty of qualified candidates, including Judge Florence Allen, of Montana, and Miss Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Others claim that there is no urgent need of a woman President, certainly not just at the moment.

The Morale.

INASMUCH as the New Dealers in their feeding of people are at the same time quite concerned about their morale it would seem they might well pay heed to the cry against carpet-baggers that comes up from Georgia. The indications are the State Legislature intends to take the matter up, probably with a view to voicing a ringing protest or memorializing the Congress or something. Anyway the protest is there whether the Legislature does anything about it or not.

BARGERON.

The FERA money is being administered not by Georgians, it is claimed, but by outsiders imported from the East. They are bigger and better money spenders, one imagines, although their importation is said to have begun after light-hearted Harry Hopkins and Gov. Talmadge had a tilt. The relief administration was taken from the Governor's hands at that time.

• • • •

That there should be indignation on the part of the State's leaders against the carpetbaggers, as they are being called, is understandable. It is their business as leaders to watch out for their people's morale. That's the reason they are leaders and not on relief themselves, that they know how to watch things of this kind.

The people who are on relief don't know when their morale is being lowered. Sometimes they may think they wish things would get better so they could get a job, or at least more income than relief provides, but they aren't equipped, they haven't the necessary instruments, to tell just at what point it is their morale is attacked, or just what it is that attacks it.

In the case of the Georgians, for example, they probably would never realize that it is the administration of the funds by carpetbaggers that gives them that low mental feeling. They know they feel down at the mouth, are not the up-and-coming, happy-go-lucky folk as of yore, but they are simply not endowed enough to point the accusing finger at the carpetbagger.

For this reason it is utterly necessary that we have leaders.

Well, now these leaders say the carpetbagger administration is hurting the people's morale. Of course, something would be hurt if there were no Federal funds forthcoming. So the alternative is manifestly not to cut off the funds. It is to let them be administered by the local boys.

It is strange that an Administration so concerned about morale should permit a condition like this to go on. It is insisting now upon spending five billions for work relief when the dole would cost much less because it wants to preserve the morale. To spend this much and then let the morale be broken down by such as is going on in Georgia seems downright ridiculous.

• • • •

It is silly, too, to contend that Light-Hearted Harry and Miss Perkins can't see the Georgia leaders' point. They know morales, spiritual values, the conduct and behavior of people. They have read several books on these subjects and thick ones, too. Previous administrations not so versed in these matters would not be expected to understand the Georgia situation. But this one is hep to the whole scale of human emotions. Its stock and trade, in fact, is continually to harp upon it.

Maybe, it can not conscientiously accept the statement that the morale of all the Georgians is being hurt by the carpetbagger administration. But its a lead-pipe cinch that the morale of some of them is being hurt.

The leaders, for example. It is safe to say that administration of the funds by outsiders makes them feel downright sick.

FERA and the Whale.

("San Juan, P. R.—FERA has spent more than $1,000 in trying to remove a dead whale from Condado Beach, with the expense still incomplete and the whale still on the beach."—News item.)

First Citizen—Well, how are things?

Second Citizen—They're a little better, thanks to the whale.

First Citizen—The what?

Second Citizen—The whale. Things began to pick up here as soon as we got it.

First Citizen—I don't follow you. What's a whale got to do with it?

Second Citizen—Oh, everything! We were very lucky to get it. And it was a big whale, too. You see it came ashore one morning quite unexpectedly and just when everybody was feeling pretty blue. It looked as though we'd never get out of the slump, but the whale changed everything. It put the whole town to work.

First Citizen—What kind of work can people do on whales?

Second Citizen—You'd be surprised.

First Citizen—Are you employed on it, too?

Second Citizen—Oh, yes. Every morning my wife wakes me up and says, "Chidsey, it's time to get up and go down to the whale." You see, I was out of work so long I got in the habit of sleeping till noon.

First Citizen—What do you do when you arrive on the job?

Second Citizen—Well, I'm a sort of general all around whale worker.

First Citizen—What do you mean by all around whale worker?

Second Citizen—You never removed a whale, did you?

First Citizen—Never.

Second Citizen—Well, you wouldn't understand. I expect to get promoted this week.

First Citizen—Promoted?

Second Citizen—Yep. I think they're going to make me head suggestion man. We're having more trouble removing this whale than we expected and I've offered so many suggestions they are going to put me in charge of that end of it.

First Citizen—Have your suggestions tended to speed up the work?

Second Citizen—Oh, no! Of course not. The whole idea is not to remove it too fast. It's pretty hard to get a whale in the first place, and there's no sense getting rid of it any faster than you can help, especially with the Government paying the bills. Say, how are things in your town?

First Citizen—Still bad.

Second Citizen—What's the matter?

First Citizen—We haven't been able to get a whale.

To A Field In Fall.

(First Prize.)

Be sad no more; the harvest hands
are washed
Clean of their greed. No more shall mad men tear
Your young away. Now comes that second spring
When, for a while, the broken stem shall mend
And slant new hopes afar. Now comes the time
For reminiscent days.

If life is past
The half-mark year, then stop and pirouette;
Live back the longer end. A dream is far Less fleeting than the time to dream
it in.

If time has crowded beauty to the wall,
Then look for life along some winding fence,
And there, between the curvings of
the soul,
May be some pinch of pasture with its thrush,
Or goldenrod in convents where the soil
Sweeps trackless as a nun.

Do you recall
The song of Indians in the clear-
wild air?
Is there not something worth a slender tear
In living deep with buffalo and deer?
Soar back to some tall hill and borrow back
The eagle's flight. Look down upon the plains.
(Peace and passion—side by side they lay.)
The fresh-mourned grave beside the hoof-warm road
Already knows a new companion-
ship
In roots of trees and shade of berry
bush.
Then comes the White Man's song:

Turn back awhile
His wagon-wheels of flight. Unburn
the trail
Of marching campfires where the mountain's ghost
Now warms his thinning soul. Fold
back the night
And fasten stars down deep in marshes where
The oxen kneeled to drink their shadows dry.

And if you tarry long and deep enough,
You will have lived two fields
within a space:
The one but grows between the plow and rake;
The other dips its roots in time
and helps
The dawn to sprout again.

And when the frost
Would rip the sun from off your breast, be quick!
And think some premature eternity:
(The wide foreverness of fields in snow.)

"Lights are going out over Europe," said Earl Grey. "We will not see them relit in our lifetime."
But why not?
It was during your lifetime
Those lights were lowered—
Your generation snuffed them
out—
Upon us who were born after Sarajevo
You thrust the task.

What have you altered to lessen
our problems?
What have you changed while we were children?
Why did you not train us to cope with these things?

Into a suspicious and scheming world we came
Some twenty years ago . . .
You had parades,
And then
You fought each other—
Or, rather, you "statesmen" let others
Fight themselves.
And then
You distributed those fourteen points.
(Clever comment of Clemenceau's
"God was satisfied with Ten Commandments;
Wilson demands fourteen.") . . .
And then
You signed an armistice . . .
Some more parades.
You took time off for lunch,
And munition-making.

All this time we were growing up.
We've adapted ourselves in some fashion
To this crazy social order . . .
We're used to it.
We feel a little secure.
This mad rush is all we know.
And now . . .
You expect us to discard it,
To calmly lay it aside.
You sacrificed their bodies—
And now
You would sacrifice our peace
of mind,
And heaven knows what else.

You say
We have to do something,
Sink or swim
In the engulfing darkness.
Why through the years
Did you not mold things for the better?

"Lights are going out," you shrug,
And pass the buck to us.
If you expect us to rekindle,
Why don't you pass us some sparks!

The Sound of Things.

(Third Prize.)

It was not river knocking on the beach,
Nor yet the wind which hovered by the door
And lifted up the latch; not wind
or rain
Or sand which seeped where foot-
fall could not reach,
Or sleep abide, or stillness drench
the core
Of hunger and old emptiness
again . . .

It was not stars or moon which can unroll
In swift, gigantic symphony; nor storm
Or rain which breaks above the listening soul
In soundless, plumbless depths,
without a form.

Yet these it might have been, and who would find
That there were lesser things which blew no door
Or strewed no shifting sand across
the hill?
Not I, not I—not I who had no mind
To know that river running down
the shore
Might well be more than water . . .
wild and still

I hear the ageless knocking; rain
apart
Treads not so deep upon the restless limb.
It is the old blood risen from the heart,
Strangled with dreams, too old, too
calm, too dim.

It is not wind which breathes so,
but this breath
Which flows from mine—the wild birds flying down
With dragging legs and quivering
yellow wings;
It knew not then the squandering
of death
Which throbs like thunder blowing through the town—
It is not wind which sobs but other things . . .

Sussex Expert

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

A DISTINGUISHED visitor to the United States is Sheila Kaye-Smith, of England, who, with her husband, the Rev. Theodore Benrose Fry, arrived at New York on January 16. She is on a lecture tour and I am very glad that she is going to remain in our country several months and travel over a wide area. She said the first thing that impressed her was "the clean, clear air," and indeed that is one of the most impressive differences between Northern Europe and the United States of America. Many foreign tennis players, who come hither for the first time, complain of the enormously high sky and the almost blinding light. The sky is often so low in Europe and the air so dense that it is like living in a tent.

• • • •

The county of Sussex, on the southeastern shore of England, where William the Conqueror landed in 1066, affords sufficient scenery for the background and sufficiently diverse types of persons for practically all of Sheila Kaye-Smith's novels. Although she nearly always has a good story to tell, her powers are most impressively displayed in the depiction of men and women; and although she has plenty of ironical humor, she draws on it only infrequently, because her sympathies are stronger than her scorn. She has a fine command of English prose and writes with a sincerity and simplicity that seem to belong to the Sussex soil.

• • • •

Her novels are "Joanna Godden," a woman farmer whom Thomas Hardy would have admired. I think Joanna is the best and most completely developed character that the author has delineated; the reader becomes profoundly interested in her and in her fortunes. Another admirable novel is "The End of the House of Allard," with a family group intensely real. "Gypsy Waggon" should be read only for the story which is very good, but because the traveling life described may become not merely a vacation exercise, as with the "trailer" in America, but the only home many children may know. It would be strange if what we call civilization should revert to the gypsies, but stranger things have happened.

Dominance Of Europe Wavers In Depression

Social Structure Caught Between Extremes Of Asia And America.

By Andre Vulliet.
(Special Correspondence of The Post).

Paris.

OVERQUIPPED, too densely populated, sick and disunited, old Europe is struggling for life against the same wave of depression that has submerged the rest of the world. But the fight she is putting on has something intensely more dramatic because it is coupled with a serious psychological breakdown. Europe is wondering whether her privileged position in the world and all her social structure are not at stake.

It seems the old continent is now slowly awakening to the fact that its ever-increasing prosperity, which culminated at the end of last century, was largely due to its supremacy, political as well as spiritual or economic, over the rest of the world.

For a little over 400 years, since the Renaissance, Europe developed a standard of material and spiritual values and an economic system that are generally known as the Occidental civilization. This form of civilization, at least its material aspect, was gradually imposed upon other peoples and other countries.

A sort of world economic system, that of the nineteenth century, was thus established, controlled and operated almost exclusively to the benefit of the old continent. Europe, it seems, took it for granted that such an order would last forever.

• • • •

BUT the present depression has shaken to the roots her confidence in the continued existence of her position. Placed between America and Asia, she realizes as well as the United States the danger of what Mr. Lothrop Stoddard calls "the rising tide of color." But, with far greater anguish, she is beginning to wonder whether the notions of "Occidental civilization" and "European life" are still similar and the question: Little European man, what now? is disturbing many a mind.

Andre Siegfried, the author of "America Comes of Age," generally regarded as one of the most far-sighted French specialists on questions pertaining to geography and economics, is asking himself the question in a series of articles published by the Revue de Paris.

"The liquidation of the war and the price collapse," he writes, "have that in common that they equally affect all continents and all countries; moreover, there is nothing intrinsically new in them, since price cycles are periodical and since the world has known other wars. But there is a third crisis, specifically European, which results from the displacement of the world's economic center of gravity.

"This crisis, started at the beginning of the twentieth century, but accelerated and aggravated by the war, seems about forever to deprive the Old World of its industrial monopoly. • • • Confronted with the economic redistribution of the machinery which is taking place throughout the world, and with young rivals who refuse to recognize its former supremacy, Europe, overequipped because of its long advance, must now justify not only its right to predominate but its right to live."

IN Mr. Siegfried's opinion, the short-lived 1924-30 prosperity period does not invalidate his theory 'that the beginning of Europe's decline can be traced back to 1900. This so-called postwar European prosperity finds its explanation in the fact that, nearly everywhere, the political power passed into the hands of irresponsible and pleasure-seeking masses. A fallacious prosperity was kept up by the swelling of public budgets and the spending of hoarded wealth.

But the foundation of the European crisis was laid at the end of last century, when "the passage from the tool to the machine age, which is the cause of the revolution we are now witnessing, opened the most disquieting human problems since neolithic times."

How Europe managed to become the world's factory is the first point stressed by Mr. Siegfried. He then shows how its dependence on distant lands for raw materials gradually forced the old continent into an expansionist policy.

To this end, Europe first secured all the sources of raw materials. Then she exported products, men, capital. At last, she embarked upon a policy of communications to control international routes.

These three activities gave the old continent its economic hegemony. "Until recently," Andre Siegfried asserts, "Europe alone could play that planetary role, but the twentieth century will no longer let her do it on the same scale."

The first blow to European suprememacy came with McKinley tariff in 1890, which emphasized American industry's independence. Then, the World War turned the United States from a debtor into a creditor country and gave it an opportunity to substitute the Old World, for a certain length of time at least, as an international banker.

• • • •

WHILE Europe had been the pioneer of machinism, the United States, helped by war and spurred by the belligerents' needs, launched "mass" production.

The drama for Europe, Mr. Siegfried contends, is that the American form of civilization is proving attractive to South America and to the American form of civilization is proving attractive to South America and to the British Dominions. "It seems doubtless," he declares, "that the white race and the Occidental civilization now have two direction centers: the American and the European ones."

The question of the spiritual direction of the world seems no less disturbing to Mr. Siegfried.

"We have to admit," he says, "that, in conquering the world, we have brought it more materialistic energy than religious spirit. • • • The civilization we represent is directed in fact toward a better organization of life, for the pursuit of materialistic aims.

"The seed we sow in alien minds—a dangerous seed, maybe—is the revelation, after thousands of years of passively endured hardships, that, after all, one can fight against misery, one can live without too much suffering and existence can even be enjoyed materially. • • • Perhaps, the most tangible results of our teaching are impatience, desire and a craving for comfort."

But, at the same time that the white race developed new appetites in other races, it also gave them the means of satisfying them. Our technique was quickly grasped for all those cheap products that do not demand expert workmanship.

On one hand, the white man's very genius has created so automatic a production that it needs neither skill nor intelligence. On the other hand, those new countries that adopted it, being socially far less evolved, were not hampered by the intricacies of a social legislation.

• • • •

"IN THE present conditions of international competition," Mr. Siegfried asserts, "Europe is beaten on many a field."

She is beaten in Orient and in the Far East as "Asia can underlive Europe." She is beaten in America, exactly for opposite reasons. America's super-equipment, which squeezes every ounce of efficiency out of man, thus accounting for higher wages, has been made possible by the immensity of the American market.

"Europe," the French writer comments, "successfully copies the United States in the scientific organization of production, but geography and political divisions deprive her of the advantages of mass production and her age prevents her from enjoying the carelessness of economic youth."

Europe's future, however, is not absolutely hopeless, Andre Siegfried thinks.

"Over Asia, even including Japan, the old continent has preserved its technical superiority. • • • The real superiority does not lie in using machines but in creating new ones. • • • The question is whether there will remain, in the future, difficult industries.

"In many ways, Europe beats the United States for the same reasons as Asia beats Europe. Europeans are more frugal and less wasting than Americans. But, in addition, quality, difficulty, creative spirit are factors likely to give the European producer an edge over his American competitor."

• • • •

EUROPE is thus in a sort of middle-of-the-road position between the Orient and the Occident, or if you prefer between the Extreme-Orient and the Extreme-Occident. Seen from Asia she looks materialistic and Occidental, while seen from America she looks almost backward.

To hold her own with the rest of the world, she still has her "creative genius and her sense of the spirit which, in fact, may be confused with the old continent's traditional culture. By the force of circumstances, Europe is condemned to be 'superior.' Quality, 'services', international financing, such are the fields where she can show her unquestionable competence."

But, as Mr. Siegfried puts it in his conclusion; will this reduced activity be enough for an entire continent to live on, especially on such a high standard as Europe has reached? This standard may be lower than America's. It is nevertheless considerably higher than Asia's. Europe will do anything in the world to preserve it. But what if she can not? As J. M. Keynes, the British economist, once put it: Men will not always die quietly.

Merchant Guilty In Weight Fraud

Samuel Gevinson Is Fined $100 in Police Court.

A plea of guilty was entered in Police Court yesterday by Samuel Gevinson, of the 100 block of E street, one of five merchants accused by the District Department of Weights and Measures of defrauding persons on relief rolls by short weights in food purchases.

Judge Gus A. Schuldt fined Gevinson $100. Warrants charging four other merchants with similar offenses have been placed in the hands of police in various precincts, but none of those named has appeared in court.

The charge against Gevinson was made by District Superintendent of Weights George M. Roberts, following a lengthy investigation of the sale of food to relief fund recipients. Appearing in court against Gevinson was W. C. Diller, inspector of weights and measures.

Roberts announced last night warrants probably would be issued against two or three more store proprietors.

Man Of The World.

Even when compressed into the small pica of Who's Who, the career of Elihu Root stands out to emphasize the fact that here, in the fullest sense of the word, is a man of the world. On the occasion of this elder statesman's ninetieth birthday it is fitting to give respectful consideration to his achievements.

As teacher, attorney, author or statesman it is apparent that Mr. Root has ordered his life with an eye toward the advancement of that vague but important science of politics on which so great a part of the world's harmony and security depends. From the time he was admitted to the bar in 1867, on through the years when he served successively as district attorney, Secretary of War under McKinley, Secretary of State under Theodore Roosevelt and United States Senator, until his appointment as a member of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague, his service has been characterized by an untiring effort to assist his country in the delicate business of playing its part in the international arena. Whether serving on an arbitration tribunal or representing his country in a diplomatic capacity, whether presiding at a national convention or simply lecturing before university undergraduates, his dominant theme has been peace and concord through intelligence and understanding.

It is no perfunctory exaggeration to describe his work, together with John Hay's, as the outstanding example of American efforts to formulate and practice a consistent foreign policy. The fullest expression of these efforts is seen in his long struggle to induce the United States to enter the World Court. As an aged man, for whom the quiet of retirement would regularly have been expected, he volunteered to arrange the protocols through which the differences of this country and the other nations were to be resolved.

That his painstaking work should have been rejected must be a bitter thought for him, all the more so because that rejection represents a triumph of demagoguery over responsible leadership. In spite of this, however, he stands forth as a foremost exemplar of sincerity in citizenship—a man of and for his country and, by the same token, of and for the world.

Adjusting Cotton Policies.

A policy of experimentation is practical only when it is accompanied by close observation, free criticism and a willingness to recognize and correct errors. Since the AAA is frankly described by the Administration as an experiment in the control of agriculture, it is quite appropriate that this agency should send Oscar G. Johnston abroad to investigate the results of its cotton program.

The unfortunate aspect of this inquiry is, of course, that the AAA delayed action until our cotton exports were drastically reduced. Critics called attention to the widening disparity between domestic and foreign cotton prices and increased production abroad more than a year ago. But the AAA went ahead with its domestic program on the assumption that foreign crop expansion would not be substantial. Recently the AAA has come to realize that an international agreement to stabilize the output of cotton will be necessary if existing prices are to be maintained without serious curtailment of our export market.

Presumably Mr. Johnston's mission is to convert the governments of Egypt, India and Brazil to cooperative control over cotton. As general manager of the AAA cotton producers' pool and one of the leading farmers of the South, he is well qualified to present the American viewpoint. But there are serious obstacles to an international agreement on cotton. Curtailment of the American crop has already taken place in an effort to remove the disastrous surplus accumulated by the ill-fated Farm Board. Foreign countries will be reluctant to forgo advantages they have already obtained as a result of the AAA program. By acting alone this country has lost a great deal of its bargaining power.

Moreover, some countries are planting cotton to relieve themselves from surpluses of other crops. Brazil, for example, is substituting cotton for coffee. Even Argentina, which is not usually considered as a cotton-producing country, is steadily expanding her acreage, partly because of the low prices of other agricultural commodities. A recent survey by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics indicates that the Argentine can expand her cotton crop by 2,000,000 acres. It is difficult to estimate what expansion may take place in China and Russia.

Significant changes in the AAA policy may be forthcoming, therefore, when Mr. Johnston concludes his survey. If an international agreement proves impractical, the United States will be forced to compete with foreign producers or gradually withdraw from the world market. Considering the upheaval that the latter policy would bring about in the South it can be contemplated only as a last resort.

Investigation Or Attack?

A resolution sponsored by Senators Nye and McCarran, containing a long list of charges against the NRA, has been referred to the Finance Committee. It takes the form of an indictment instead of an unprejudiced request to investigate the activities of the recovery administration.

Presumably the outcome of the inquiry will assist the committee to decide whether to recommend extension of the NRA for two more years. Another resolution reported from the Senate's Judiciary Committee calls for investigation of charges that the NRA has contributed to the growth of monopolies. In both instances an attitude of prosecution seems to supersede the desire for information.

Unquestionably, the NRA is in need of reform. Many codes have proved to be socially undesirable or unworkable. Others have been forgotten, or their provisions have been defied with impunity. Certain economic policies agreed upon by codified industries relating to price and production control have been discredited in some cases and justified in others. Consequently, a formidable task of selective overhauling and revision of the rules and regulations adopted under the NRA lies ahead. Policies need to be reformulated. The administrative organization should be accommodated to the exigencies of a new order. Above all, balanced judgments are required to salvage the good features of the NRA while eliminating the bad ones.

Sweeping denunciatory verdicts are out of place in view of the results obtained under the NRA. Large numbers of business men have expressed a strong desire to continue operating under codes, however critical they may be of specific practices. Desired reforms will not be assisted by intemperate congressional assaults upon an admittedly imperfect system. Business men and labor, too, have a right to expect that when a senatorial committee undertakes to change the existing law it will study the complex problems that have arisen without rancor and without being unduly influenced by hostile criticism.

When Senators inveigh against the monopolistic trend encouraged by the NRA they apparently forget that representatives of a good many small and medium-sized industries assert that their chief protection against loss of independence lies in a relaxation of the prohibitions of the antitrust laws made possible under code agreements. Similarly, complaints that high prices have been fostered and the public injured by various agreements designed to prevent destructive price cutting, sales below cost, etc., are defended in all sincerity by their advocates as a means of assuring lower prices in the long run. In brief, the diatribes launched against the NRA have to be taken with reservations, and evils weighed against benefits in a spirit of impartiality.

Ambitious efforts at industrial regimentation with inadequate preparation for the task assumed must inevitably fail in many respects. However, time is needed to correct mistakes and evolve a permanent policy that will conserve the good and discard the evil. From present indications the Senate is going about this task of revision most injudiciously.

The best way to deal with the NRA would be to extend its tenure of life temporarily, without substantial change, trusting that the new administrative agencies will gradually eliminate the worst abuses and assist Congress to formulate permanent legislation in the light of experience.

Far From Discouraging.

Recent developments on the chess-board of Europe reveal Hitler as an astute politician. Electing a gambit opening some months ago, he has repeatedly emphasized his nation's desire for peace, which protestations have been taken at little less than face value by France and Great Britain. Willing to sacrifice pawn for pawn, these latter players early in the month proffered arms equality in return for an agreement pledging mutual aid against aggressive attacks from the air, together with agreements guaranteeing stability in central Europe and maintenance of the eastern frontiers.

To this move Hitler now replies with consummate cunning: he sends only an oral answer indicating his hearty accord with the western air proposal but evading committal on the central European and eastern plans. By this strategy he leaves the matter open to diplomatic negotiations but not international conference, thus maintaining his relative position on the board and putting the next move up to London and Paris.

If little appears to have been accomplished thus far, at least the German point of view and probable course of action is clarified. England and France dangled arms equality before Germany as an inducement to enter the general convention; by her answer Germany indicates that arms equality is not an inducement or a concession, but is a prerequisite to any discussions at all. Furthermore, the vagueness of the answer as regards the proposed eastern pacts suggests that the ingrained German aversion to commitment or restriction on its eastern borders, which dates back to the days of Stresseman, still prevails. And the avoidance of the central European question demonstrates that Germany's hopes for an eventual Anschluss with Austria have not yet been abandoned.

Reactions in London and Paris indicate that neither foreign office is pessimistic, though the French are naturally disappointed by the German coolness to the eastern Locarno suggestion. The shrewd bargaining evinced by the Nazi government points to an underlying desire to effect some definite understandings with its European neighbors—always on a basis of equality, however. Such understandings are in all probability not to be reached in the immediate future, but the prospects for ultimate agreement are far from discouraging.

No Figs From Thistles.

Selection of Gen. Robert E. Wood as chief adviser to the Administration in working out its public works program indicates a commendable desire to coordinate this vast undertaking with the activities of private enterprise. If the group of business men to be headed by Gen. Wood makes an active study of projects and the general policies to be followed, its advice may be extremely valuable. Guidance from a body of this sort becomes all the more important because of the obscurity of the bill which Congress has been asked to pass.

The manner in which this board originated, however, tends to strengthen the widespread skepticism with which this bill is regarded. Secretary Roper says the plan was suggested to the President two weeks ago and was immediately approved. Apparently this means that the $4,880,000,000 public works-relief measure was sent to Congress while the question of what agency should formulate a program was just as vague as the question of how this fund should be spent. Such haphazard planning, where an enormous obligation against taxpayers is involved, can only intensify the apprehension of Congress and the public.

Several improvements have been made in the public works resolution since it was passed by the House. But all of the changes are of minor importance compared with the central objective of this extraordinary measure. The Senate Appropriations Committee made an earnest effort to analyze the Administration's program, but found it so inchoate that not even a general policy could be outlined in the resolution. No congressional committee can hope to transform a vague and undefined bill into a practical plan for the expenditure of nearly five billion dollars.

On several points the Appropriations Committee reversed previous decisions. The public works feature of the bill, its central objective, narrowly escaped excision. No clear-cut opinion on any provision was formulated. The committee merely floundered about in a morass of confusion and ignorance of the President's intentions. Finding no coherent reply to its demands for information as to how the fund would be spent, it finally succumbed to befuddlement and political pressure.

The hopeless task of trying to write a sound law to authorize an unplanned undertaking of gigantic proportions will now go forward on the floor of the Senate. Since that body will have no further information than was vouchsafed to the committee, there is not much hope that the basic weaknesses in this venture will be corrected. Congress can not make something out of nothing.

An Ounce Of Playwright.

"Broadway Explains Itself" meetings are being held in Brooklyn, a city which demands explanation of many manifestations of our civilization. At each gathering a playwright with a current show on Broadway relates where he got the initial idea for his play and how he worked it out. He tells whether the plot was conceived from a casual scene in the street; from a fragment of some anecdote, or from some personal experience of his own.

The dissection of the brain-children of playwrights has hitherto been regarded as the special prerogative of the critic. In many cases, the operation proves to be a major one. It takes a very hardened or a very wise playwright to regard such treatment as nothing more than a corrective measure for growing pains.

There are only three types of play possible—the gilded lily type, the tiger lily type, and the lily-of-the-valley type. The musical comedy, depending for its life on extravagant beauty and sparkle, belongs to the first pattern. The tiger lily plays are those in which sex rears its ugly head over a leopard skin. Sweetness and light are the essence of plays in the last category.

It is the purpose of these meetings in Brooklyn to determine whether an expectant playwright deliberately chooses a plot from one of these classes or if he simply shuts his eyes and picks one by the old eeny, meeny, miny, mo process. From the size of the crowds that are being turned away every week, it would appear that the public at least thinks an ounce of playwright is worth a pound of critic.

The Return of Mr. Lloyd George.

(From the Christian Science Monitor.)

For the last three years Mr. Lloyd George has been a dark horse in the political world. Since he refused to support the national government in 1931, and stood apart from both of the groups into which the Liberty Party became divided, he has taken little part in public life. He retired like Achilles to his tent, and there wrote the four volumes of his war memoirs.

And now he has announced his return. He counts upon rallying round himself and his program a few of the Liberals and a few of the Socialists; and may it not be that in the next Parliament—labor being stronger and the national government supporters weaker—he may find himself with a group of followers whose vote on either side would be the determining factor? If so, once again Mr. Lloyd George would be the virtual ruler of Britain. That appears to be the calculation. Mr. Lloyd George is as resourceful as ever. He may or may not succeed, but he will make British politics more exciting.

Letters To The Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation, and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

Let Japan Buy Manchuria.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The present attitude of Japan on the naval ratio problem for a vastly increased navy, together with her recent seizure of Manchuria and later gesture of seizure of other territory, constitutes a real menace to world peace.

But that menace could be overcome most easily if Japan would but adopt the good business principle of purchase rather than seizure. Purchase is always honorable, while robbery is despicable — whether it be a province or a sack of rice. If Japan would pay China for Manchuria and other desired territory, the civilized world would applaud and the menace of war would vanish; world navies would be quickly reduced, and a new era would dawn in civilization.

This is the policy of business men in daily mercantile affairs. This business-like policy would save Japan hundreds of millions in gold which huge naval and air forces would cost to build and maintain. That gold could more wisely be invested in needed provinces for her growing population. It is the honorable policy.

Real Community Spirit.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a reader of The Post for many years. Since the present management took over the paper I can't give you very much for your editorial policy, especially in reference to Maryland politics. For a good old Republican paper to be praising the Democratic leaders of Maryland gives me a pain.

But my hat is off to you in your decision to discontinue the sale of papers from racks. I have always thought the selling of papers that way a disgrace to any newspaper and indefensible from any angle.

Not only is it a very poor method of merchandising, but the system has contributed in a large degree to the generally untidy and unkempt condition of Washington streets. If the newspapers had been required to clean up their torn, wet, windblown papers the system would have been done away with long ago.

My congratulations to The Post. This is real community spirit and a great step in civic pride.

Prefers Italian System.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every real friend of the President should tenaciously oppose his wish, or his willingness to have dumped on him either the responsibility or the power of allocating the grotesque $4,880,000,000 fund. Its extravagance and absurdity are augmented by the assurance which has been given that the President, alone, will determine its distribution.

If he had no presidential duties, it would be obviously impossible for any one man to direct the expenditure of such a fabulous sum. No potentate on earth was ever burdened with such responsibility, or had conferred on him such power.

If conditions have made it impossible to operate under the Constitution, I greatly prefer a newly defined system resembling that of Italy, which will counteract the growing reliance on Government support and sternly direct the citizen to abandon his wealth-consuming practices, live within his means and support himself and an honest Government. We need Government honesty and providence as a necessary base for individual honesty and economic recovery.

Best Of Three.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I congratulate you on having the Post-Impressionist column among your daily features? I read three daily papers, and none of them has the stimulating variety and good-humored sophistication of this column. Indeed, I wonder why one of the New York sheets has not taken the writer from you. The stuff is never botchily written, and there is a wealth of subject matter.

Good luck to the columnist. And power to you both!

Printing And The Copyright Union.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your editorial of February 11 you stressed the advantage of the entry of the United States into the Copyright Union. Such action would not only obtain for our authors, as you point out, automatic protection for their works, without formality, in the 40 countries now within that union, but it would stimulate foreign authors to publish their works in the United States, thus making business for our publishers and work for our printers.

Prompt adherence now would avoid the delay involved in a preliminary discussion of copyright legislation and Congressional action could follow to secure the needed conformity between our laws and the treaty obligations.

Objection has been made by our printers to entry into the Copyright Union because it would add to unemployment by reason of the necessary abrogation of the present requirement to print British books here. Our own authors must continue to print here in order to secure copyright.

The obligation to print here must be done away with; the British authors privilege to do so remains, and entry into the Copyright Union, instead of diminishing American printing would increase it because of the greater publication of foreign works here, under the stimulus of the treaty.

In 1891 our law made American printing obligatory for all copyrighted books, including books in foreign languages. This last resulted in loss of printing instead of gain and in 1909 our printers with the acquiescence of James M. Lynch, president of the International Typographical Union, helped to amend our law so that obligatory American printing since that time has applied (so far as foreign authors are concerned) only to books in the English language published abroad.

The result no doubt has been increased printing of foreign-language literature, but the reduction of printing in this country to less than one-quarter of the books produced from year to year in England. The reason for this is quite understandable. The making of two editions (British and American) merely to obtain copyright for the book in this country, has involved too great a cost, and the British author has been obliged to let his American copyright go—to his own frequent monetary loss and to the certain loss of work for our printers.

Under the convention the British author's book would at once have full legal protection and he need no longer feel concern as to that matter; can take his own time and at his own convenience can arrange for the publication of his book over here and the production of an American printed edition. He would know that an American publisher is best equipped to distribute and sell his book in the United States. The American printer would find his reward in increased work.

Elderly Equines.

It has been asserted in the course of a hearing before the committee on military affairs of the General Assembly that some of the horses used by the Cavalry section of the Connecticut National Guard average about 18 years old, while there are a few equine veterans of 28 or 30. It is also intimated that some of the horses are second-hand, as it were, for, after the United States Army feels that they are too old for a strenuous life, it sends them to Connecticut. That, it strikes one, is kind on the part of Uncle Sam, and one trusts the horses take kindly to facing old age in this State.

The screen has given many of us an opportunity to witness Cavalry maneuvers without getting in the way of the mounted troops. We have seen horses and their riders taking hedges, fences and ditches with ease, stopping at nothing short of a suburban bungalow, but now that one hears the statements made at the hearings we have doubts that are disturbing. One may now wonder if one of these elderly steeds could leap over a tennis net with any degree of safety. Is there an Old Horses' Home, and is it within the borders of the State?

The impression has grown that the horse in warfare is out of date and that the world would never see a battle won or lost by a Cavalry charge, but if the United States has Cavalry there must be something for it to do. If so, there ought to be horses young enough to do it. Those now in service are almost old enough to attend a reunion of Spanish-American War veterans.

Laureate's Truth.

Reviewing the "Colloquies" of Robert Southey, then the poet laureate of England, Lord Macaulay in the January of 1830—just 105 years ago—wrote:

"It is not by the intermeddling of Mr. Southey's idol, the omniscient and omnipotent State, but by the prudence and energy of the people, that England has hitherto been carried forward in civilization; and it is to the same prudence and energy that we now look with comfort and good hope. Our rulers will best promote the improvement of the nation by strictly confining themselves to their own legitimate duties, by leaving capital to find its most lucrative course, commodities their fair price, industry and intelligence their natural reward, idleness and folly their natural punishment, by maintaining peace, by defending property, by diminishing the price of law and by observing strict economy in every department of the state.

"Let the government do this; the people will assuredly do the rest."

The Post Impressionist

Negus Negust.

Post Office, Saturday.

SLIGHTLY mistaken are those among our learned contemporaries who speak of the row between Italy and Abyssinia as "a dispute between a Christian nation and a Mohammedan."

Abyssinia is a Christian country.

In fact, the Abyssinian Church is one of the oldest of Christian churches. It is almost as old as the Eastern Orthodox Church from which the Abyssinians separated in 451.

Haile Selassie, the present monarch of Shoa, Emperor of Ethiopia, Lion of Judah and Negus Negust or King of Kings—to give him no more of his titles—is not only a blood relation of Menelik II, who worsted—who, indeed, annihilated—an Italian army in the little 1896 unpleasantness. He asserts, like Menelik and all of his forefathers—asserts with some show of reason, too—that the family descends from the Queen of Sheba who "heard of the fame of Solomon" and visited his court. Haile Selaisse seized the throne from his predecessor, Lij Yasu, exactly because the latter abjured Christianity and announced his intention of embracing Mohammedanism. And the State Church, the religion of the country, is derived from the Coptic Church of Egypt.

The Egyptian people of that faith are the last remaining remnant of the ancient Egyptians. Their ecclesiastical language is the language of the Pharaohs. All that is left of the old "learning and lineage" of the Nile is compressed within their narrow limits.

But, as Christians, they are accounted heretics by both the Eastern and Western Churches. Although by denying Christ's human nature to stress His divinity, the old Coptic heresy is only an exaggeration of the orthodoxy of St. Athanasius and St. Cyril, the African Monophysites clung so close to their error as to choose a material surrender to Saracen rule rather than a spiritual alliance with Constantinople.

Christianity was sent to Abyssina in the Fourth Century by the (Orthodox) Chuch of Alexandria. The Abyssinians became Monophysites with the Copts in the Fifth Century. At last the westward growth of the Mohammedan power isolated the Abyssinians completely. They have ever since been isolated, though latterly of their own will. They had then to consecrate the heads of their sect by the imposition of their first Patriarch's mummified hand; that hand is still employed for this purpose.

The Coptic Church has its peculiarities and, in addition, preserves many a feature of the Jewish ritual. There was, and is, the kiss exchanged throughout the congregation, as among the Armenian Christians, the employment, also, of children as deacons. There was, and is, the head-covering of all worshipers, their feet unshod.

The Abyssinian Church has gone further. The loud shrieks that Herodotus heard at Egyptian funerals are heard today at every funeral in Ethiopia. In the services of its faith, the center of devotion is the Ark of the Covenant, called the Ark of Zion, on which gifts are laid, to which prayers are addressed. There are sacred dances. Both the Jewish Sabbath and the Christian Sunday are observed. Circumcision is practiced. The flesh of swine is forbidden; the "sinew that shrank," may not be eaten.

Not Easter, or Christmas, but the Epiphany, is the greatest festival among the Abyssinians; then there occurs a general lustration of the people, which some ill-informed observers have confused with a rebaptism. Pilate, moreover, is a Saint in the Ethiopian calendar—because he "found no fault" in his Prisoner.

One amateur theologian concludes somewhat thus a summary of the Abyssinian creed:

That faith, sealed by baptism after fasting and compensatory alms, is enough for justification; that the unbaptized are not saved and that the Saints should be invoked because ordinary sinful mortals are unworthy to plead for themselves——

But that sins must be confessed to a priest and, through him, absolution secured from above; that every sin is pardoned upon a devout pilgrimage to Jerusalem; and that, though prayers for the faithful dead are obligatory, there is, between death and salvation, an intermediate period (apparently not precisely a Purgatory) the length of which depends upon the good works done during life on earth.

Abyssinia changes slowly and little. She is a compound of pride and humility, of meekness and ferocity, of old learning and what often seems to be the eternal reverse.

But her people outrank the other self-governing natives of Africa—outrank most of them that are governed by Europeans—in social condition, in agriculture, in the laws and in the arts.

And, as you see, they are not Mohammedans.

Satevepost John Doe Identified By Death

New York Discovers Van Brunt, Hears Sally Rand And Hunts Alligators.

By Ralph E. Renaud.
(Special Correspondence of The Post).

New York.

THERE is only one profession wherein tremendous celebrity may be achieved with complete anonymity. Newspaper work is supposed to be anonymous but when the reporter stands out a bit the city editor tosses him a signature. Editorials are unsigned, but everyone knows the great editorial writers of the country. A radio announcer of parts soon becomes a magnetized name. The one exception is the profession of the model.

The artist signs himself, never the model. The model, in his own form and features, may stand in the courthouse square supporting the whole bronze world on his shoulders, yet nobody knows him. The model's face may be duplicated as countless thousands of magazine covers yet she moves about unrecognized by the crowd. She may smile a hundred times for tooth paste, cigarettes or face cream and still remain the Forgotten Girl.

One such model, perhaps the most widely reproduced of any, has just died on Long Island. Millions saw his face and figure repeatedly on the cover of the Saturday Evening Post. Norman Rockwell painted him many times. J. C. Leyendecker used him over and over again. Yet to everyone who admired the paintings the subject was merely John Doe.

• • • •

HIS real name was James K. Van Brunt and he was 85 years old. Mr. Rockwell used him as a model for his oft-repeated figure of "the world-weary, abused little man." The pathetic stoop of his 5 feet 2 inches and his drooping mustache excited many a sympathetic smile. Rockwell won a medal by depicting Van Brunt as a tramp toasting frankfurters over a jungle fire. One of Leyendecker's best covers showed Van Brunt as a mannequin helpless in the clutch of a large and determined wife pinning up a new party dress on him. He has often fished from model platforms or smoked his corncob pipe, to blaze out later in full color as the epitome of Mr. Common Man.

Yet Van Brunt wasn't that kind of a man at all. He wasn't a bit meek. He was a drummer boy in the Civil War and in later years often used to bang away merrily on the same drum. He was a lieutenant in the Spanish-American War and tried hard to enlist in the World War. When they wouldn't take him on account of his age he popped up as a lieutenant in the auxiliary police and militia.

• • • •

HE did not become a model until he was around 75. Before that he mostly did odd jobs, except when there was a war floating around. Norman Rockwell, remembering his pathetic shoulders and his luxuriant mustache, shot him into a kind of anonymous fame with his medal-winning tramp picture. With a certain prosperity, suppressed desires began to seep to the surface and the old man blossomed out into vivid clothes, quite unsuited to his pictures. He also became addicted to mentioning that he and Napoleon were of an exact height.

Once, for pictorial purposes, Rockwell begged him to shave off his mustache.

"I've been most of my life raising that," reflected the old model, "but here goes."

And off it went. But he earned $10 losing it and cultivated a new one to boot.

IT looks as though Sally Rand meant to incorporate her fans and bubbles. She astonished a meeting of New York executives the other day, not by dancing for them, which would have been no surprise, but by handing them a sales talk which might have come from the head of a department store.

"I realized at the outset," the cool little blonde informed them, "that 90 per cent of the merchandise that is sold in this country is sold to women; that sales talks, for that reason, must be directed at women. In my case, that fact presented obvious difficulties.

"Still, I believed I had something salable. So I decided to advertise, since advertising is the secret of successful merchandising."

She selected Chicago as her market and the World's Fair as her platform, so to speak. "There were more potential buyers there," she explained. As the trade stimulus of the fair, raids and what not began to wear off she bought "specialized training" and proceeded to organize it. This included other girls, an orchestra and balloons big enough to conceal yet translucent enough to reveal. It also included a press agent.

For the rest of Miss Rand's excursion into the terminology of big business please consult her press agent. She certainly got a smart one.

NEW YORK has often been described as a human zoo. But it doesn't stop there. The most extraordinary and unexpected animals are always cropping up in the most amazing places. By no means all of them escape from Bronx Park, either, though a python, a honey bear, or a playful chimpanzee have at various times wandered from their happy homes up there.

The latest zoological specimen to emerge into the pulsing life of the metropolis is, or was, a denizen of the underworld. He was an 8-foot alligator living in a sewer, and his size and weight indicate that he must have maintained a residence there for some time. The episode happened, not in the Bronx, where so many strange things happen, but in Harlem.

Four boys shoveling snow into a sewer noticed something swishing around in the manhole. One of them ran home and fetched his mother's clothesline, a stout one as it proved. Then they made a slip noose and swung it over the reptile's tail.

The alligator didn't like it much, but came to the surface anyway. There he put up a pretty good fight, even though he was well iced at the time. Four shovels and the shouted directions of many kibitzers proved too much for him. The four St. Georges dragged him away as a trophy of big game hunting in darkest Harlem. Now he is on exhibition at a barber shop to prove that anybody, any time, can have a close shave in New York.

• • • •

SPEAKING of St. Georges suggests that they have turned up a forge in Long Island City where sixteenth century fighting blades are wrought, possibly for use against wandering alligators. It takes six hours to make a sword and they say the blades are as good as any that ever came out of Toledo or Milan.

A few days ago the members of the Armor and Arms Club watched Kenneth Lynch, the master smith, pound out a cherry red weapon. His workmen stood beneath a sign which read:

"Well come ye men at armes and fellow craftsmen to ply thy talents earnestly in mine armorie of light and air. What we do, we shall do our best in thy name—Old Soldier."

It all seems part of a movement to make the world more smith-conscious, though plowshares seem more popular just at the moment than swords.

The League for a Woman President has opened permanent headquarters in Brooklyn. Miss Lillian D. Rock, vice president of the National Association of Women Lawyers, is its sponsor and she says there is already an enrolled membership of 3,000 men and women, which she expects to be 300,000 within a year.

There is a slight preponderance of women in the United States. Provided that they become sufficiently sex-conscious they can certainly elect a woman President, if they can get her nominated. Miss Rock claims that there are plenty of qualified candidates, including Judge Florence Allen, of Montana, and Miss Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Others claim that there is no urgent need of a woman President, certainly not just at the moment.

FERA and the Whale.

("San Juan, P. R.—FERA has spent more than $1,000 in trying to remove a dead whale from Condado Beach, with the expense still incomplete and the whale still on the beach."—News item.)

First Citizen—Well, how are things?

Second Citizen—They're a little better, thanks to the whale.

First Citizen—The what?

Second Citizen—The whale. Things began to pick up here as soon as we got it.

First Citizen—I don't follow you. What's a whale got to do with it?

Second Citizen—Oh, everything! We were very lucky to get it. And it was a big whale, too. You see it came ashore one morning quite unexpectedly and just when everybody was feeling pretty blue. It looked as though we'd never get out of the slump, but the whale changed everything. It put the whole town to work.

First Citizen—What kind of work can people do on whales?

Second Citizen—You'd be surprised.

First Citizen—Are you employed on it, too?

Second Citizen—Oh, yes. Every morning my wife wakes me up and says, "Chidsey, it's time to get up and go down to the whale." You see, I was out of work so long I got in the habit of sleeping till noon.

First Citizen—What do you do when you arrive on the job?

Second Citizen—Well, I'm a sort of general all around whale worker.

First Citizen—What do you mean by all around whale worker?

Second Citizen—You never removed a whale, did you?

First Citizen—Never.

Second Citizen—Well, you wouldn't understand. I expect to get promoted this week.

First Citizen—Promoted?

Second Citizen—Yep. I think they're going to make me head suggestion man. We're having more trouble removing this whale than we expected and I've offered so many suggestions they are going to put me in charge of that end of it.

First Citizen—Have your suggestions tended to speed up the work?

Second Citizen—Oh, no! Of course not. The whole idea is not to remove it too fast. It's pretty hard to get a whale in the first place, and there's no sense getting rid of it any faster than you can help, especially with the Government paying the bills. Say, how are things in your town?

First Citizen—Still bad.

Second Citizen—What's the matter?

First Citizen—We haven't been able to get a whale.

With Carlisle Bargeron

The Morale.

INASMUCH as the New Dealers in their feeding of people are at the same time quite concerned about their morale it would seem they might well pay heed to the cry against carpet-baggers that comes up from Georgia. The indications are the State Legislature intends to take the matter up, probably with a view to voicing a ringing protest or memorializing the Congress or something. Anyway the protest is there whether the Legislature does anything about it or not.

BARGERON.

The FERA money is being administered not by Georgians, it is claimed, but by outsiders imported from the East. They are bigger and better money spenders, one imagines, although their importation is said to have begun after light-hearted Harry Hopkins and Gov. Talmadge had a tilt. The relief administration was taken from the Governor's hands at that time.

• • • •

That there should be indignation on the part of the State's leaders against the carpetbaggers, as they are being called, is understandable. It is their business as leaders to watch out for their people's morale. That's the reason they are leaders and not on relief themselves, that they know how to watch things of this kind.

The people who are on relief don't know when their morale is being lowered. Sometimes they may think they wish things would get better so they could get a job, or at least more income than relief provides, but they aren't equipped, they haven't the necessary instruments, to tell just at what point it is their morale is attacked, or just what it is that attacks it.

In the case of the Georgians, for example, they probably would never realize that it is the administration of the funds by carpetbaggers that gives them that low mental feeling. They know they feel down at the mouth, are not the up-and-coming, happy-go-lucky folk as of yore, but they are simply not endowed enough to point the accusing finger at the carpetbagger.

For this reason it is utterly necessary that we have leaders.

Well, now these leaders say the carpetbagger administration is hurting the people's morale. Of course, something would be hurt if there were no Federal funds forthcoming. So the alternative is manifestly not to cut off the funds. It is to let them be administered by the local boys.

It is strange that an Administration so concerned about morale should permit a condition like this to go on. It is insisting now upon spending five billions for work relief when the dole would cost much less because it wants to preserve the morale. To spend this much and then let the morale be broken down by such as is going on in Georgia seems downright ridiculous.

• • • •

It is silly, too, to contend that Light-Hearted Harry and Miss Perkins can't see the Georgia leaders' point. They know morales, spiritual values, the conduct and behavior of people. They have read several books on these subjects and thick ones, too. Previous administrations not so versed in these matters would not be expected to understand the Georgia situation. But this one is hep to the whole scale of human emotions. Its stock and trade, in fact, is continually to harp upon it.

Maybe, it can not conscientiously accept the statement that the morale of all the Georgians is being hurt by the carpetbagger administration. But its a lead-pipe cinch that the morale of some of them is being hurt.

The leaders, for example. It is safe to say that administration of the funds by outsiders makes them feel downright sick.

To A Field In Fall.

(First Prize.)

Be sad no more; the harvest hands
are washed
Clean of their greed. No more shall mad men tear
Your young away. Now comes that second spring
When, for a while, the broken stem
shall mend
And slant new hopes afar. Now comes the time
For reminiscent days.

If life is past
The half-mark year, then stop and
pirouette;
Live back the longer end. A dream
is far Less fleeting than the time to dream
it in.

If time has crowded beauty to the wall,
Then look for life along some winding fence,
And there, between the curvings of
the soul,
May be some pinch of pasture with its thrush,
Or goldenrod in convents where the soil
Sweeps trackless as a nun.

Do you recall
The song of Indians in the clear-
wild air?
Is there not something worth a slender tear
In living deep with buffalo and deer?
Soar back to some tall hill and borrow back
The eagle's flight. Look down upon the plains,
(Peace and passion—side by side
they lay.)
The fresh-mourned grave beside the hoof-warm road
Already knows a new companion-
ship
In roots of trees and shade of berry
bush.
Then comes the White Man's song:

Turn back awhile
His wagon-wheels of flight. Unburn
the trail
Of marching campfires where the mountain's ghost
Now warms his thinning soul. Fold
back the night
And fasten stars down deep in marshes where
The oxen kneeled to drink their shadows dry.

And if you tarry long and deep enough,
You will have lived two fields
within a space:
The one but grows between the
plow and rake;
The other dips its roots in time
and helps
The dawn to sprout again.

And when the frost
Would rip the sun from off your breast, be quick!
And think some premature eternity:
(The wide foreverness of fields in snow.)

Indictment.

(Second Prize.)

"Lights are going out over Europe," said Earl Grey. "We will not see them relit in our lifetime."
But why not?
It was during your lifetime
Those lights were lowered—
Your generation snuffed them
out—
Upon us who were born after Sarajevo
You thrust the task.

What have you altered to lessen
our problems?
What have you changed while we were children?
Why did you not train us to cope
with these things?

Into a suspicious and scheming
world we came
Some twenty years ago . . .
You had parades,
And then
You fought each other—
Or, rather, you "statesmen" let others
Fight themselves.
And then
You distributed those fourteen points.
(Clever comment of Clemenceau's
"God was satisfied with Ten Commandments;
Wilson demands fourteen.") . . .
And then
You signed an armistice . . .
Some more parades.
You took time off for lunch,
And munition-making.

All this time we were growing up.
We've adapted ourselves in some fashion
To this crazy social order . . .
We're used to it.
We feel a little secure.
This mad rush is all we know.
And now . . .
You expect us to discard it,
To calmly lay it aside.
You sacrificed their bodies—
And now
You would sacrifice our peace
of mind,
And heaven knows what else.

You say
We have to do something.
Sink or swim
In the engulfing darkness.
Why through the years
Did you not mold things for the better?

"Lights are going out," you shrug,
And pass the buck to us.
If you expect us to rekindle,
Why don't you pass us some sparks!

The Sound of Things.

(Third Prize.)

It was not river knocking on the beach,
Nor yet the wind which hovered by
the door
And lifted up the latch; not wind
or rain
Or sand which seeped where foot-
fall could not reach,
Or sleep abide, or stillness drench
the core
Of hunger and old emptiness
again . . .

It was not stars or moon which can unroll
In swift, gigantic symphony; nor storm
Or rain which breaks above the listening soul
In soundless, plumbless depths,
without a form.

Yet these it might have been, and who would find
That there were lesser things which blew no door
Or strewed no shifting sand across
the hill?

Not I, not I—not I who had no mind
To know that river running down
the shore
Might well be more than water . . .
wild and still

I hear the ageless knocking; rain
apart
Treads not so deep upon the restless
limb.
It is the old blood risen from the heart,
Strangled with dreams, too old, too
calm, too dim.

It is not wind which breathes so,
but this breath
Which flows from mine—the wild birds flying down
With dragging legs and quivering
yellow wings;
It knew not then the squandering
of death
Which throbs like thunder blowing through the town—
It is not wind which sobs but other things . . .

Sussex Expert

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

A DISTINGUISHED visitor to the United States is Sheila Kaye-Smith, of England, who, with her husband, the Rev. Theodore Benrose Fry, arrived at New York on January 16. She is on a lecture tour and I am very glad that she is going to remain in our country several months and travel over a wide area. She said the first thing that impressed her was "the clean, clear air," and indeed that is one of the most impressive differences between Northern Europe and the United States of America. Many foreign tennis players, who come hither for the first time, complain of the enormously high sky and the almost blinding light. The sky is often so low in Europe and the air so dense that it is like living in a tent.

• • • •

The county of Sussex, on the southeastern shore of England, where William the Conqueror landed in 1066, affords sufficient scenery for the background and sufficiently diverse types of persons for practically all of Sheila Kaye-Smith's novels. Although she nearly always has a good story to tell, her powers are most impressively displayed in the depiction of men and women; and although she has plenty of ironical humor, she draws on it only infrequently, because her sympathies are stronger than her scorn. She has a fine command of English prose and writes with a sincerity and simplicity that seem to belong to the Sussex soil.

• • • •

Her novels are "Joanna Godden," a woman farmer whom Thomas Hardy would have admired. I think Joanna is the best and most completely developed character that the author has delineated; the reader becomes profoundly interested in her and in her fortunes. Another admirable novel is "The End of the House of Allard," with a family group intensely real. "Gypsy Waggon" should be read only for the story which is very good, but because the traveling life described may become not merely a vacation exercise, as with the "trailer" in America, but the only home many children may know. It would be strange if what we call civilization should revert to the gypsies, but stranger things have happened.

Dominance Of Europe Wavers In Depression

Social Structure Caught Between Extremes Of Asia And America.

By Andre Vulliet.
(Special Correspondence of The Post).

Paris.

OVERQUIPPED, too densely populated, sick and disunited, old Europe is struggling for life against the same wave of depression that has submerged the rest of the world. But the fight she is putting on has something intensely more dramatic because it is coupled with a serious psychological breakdown. Europe is wondering whether her privileged position in the world and all her social structure are not at stake.

It seems the old continent is now slowly awakening to the fact that its ever-increasing prosperity, which culminated at the end of last century, was largely due to its supremacy, political as well as spiritual or economic, over the rest of the world.

For a little over 400 years, since the Renaissance, Europe developed a standard of material and spiritual values and an economic system that are generally known as the Occidental civilization. This form of civilization, at least its material aspect, was gradually imposed upon other peoples and other countries.

A sort of world economic system, that of the nineteenth century, was thus established, controlled and operated almost exclusively to the benefit of the old continent. Europe, it seems, took it for granted that such an order would last forever.

• • • •

BUT the present depression has shaken to the roots her confidence in the continued existence of her position. Placed between America and Asia, she realizes as well as the United States the danger of what Mr. Lothrop Stoddard calls "the rising tide of color." But, with far greater anguish, she is beginning to wonder whether the notions of "Occidental civilization" and "European life" are still similar and the question: Little European man, what now? is disturbing many a mind.

Andre Siegfried, the author of "America Comes of Age," generally regarded as one of the most farsighted French specialists on questions pertaining to geography and economics, is asking himself the question in a series of articles published by the Revue de Paris.

"The liquidation of the war and the price collapse," he writes, "have that in common that they equally affect all continents and all countries; moreover, there is nothing intrinsically new in them, since price cycles are periodical and since the world has known other wars. But there is a third crisis, specifically European, which results from the displacement of the world's economic center of gravity.

"This crisis, started at the beginning of the twentieth century, but accelerated and aggravated by the war, seems about forever to deprive the Old World of its industrial monopoly. • • • Confronted with the economic redistribution of the machinery which is taking place throughout the world, and with young rivals who refuse to recognize its former supremacy, Europe, overequipped because of its long advance, must now justify not only its right to predominate but its right to live."

IN Mr. Siegfried's opinion, the short-lived 1924-30 prosperity period does not invalidate his theory 'that the beginning of Europe's decline can be traced back to 1900. This so-called postwar European prosperity finds its explanation in the fact that, nearly everywhere, the political power passed into the hands of irresponsible and pleasure-seeking masses. A fallacious prosperity was kept up by the swelling of public budgets and the spending of hoarded wealth.

But the foundation of the European crisis was laid at the end of last century, when "the passage from the tool to the machine age, which is the cause of the revolution we are now witnessing, opened the most disquieting human problems since neolithic times."

How Europe managed to become the world's factory is the first point stressed by Mr. Siegfried. He then shows how its dependence on distant lands for raw materials gradually forced the old continent into an expansionist policy.

To this end, Europe first secured all the sources of raw materials. Then she exported products, men, capital. At last, she embarked upon a policy of communications to control international routes.

These three activities gave the old continent its economic hegemony. "Until recently," Andre Siegfried asserts, "Europe alone could play that planetary role, but the twentieth century will no longer let her do it on the same scale."

The first blow to European supremacy came with McKinley tariff in 1890, which emphasized American industry's independence. Then, the World War turned the United States from a debtor into a creditor country and gave it an opportunity to substitute the Old World, for a certain length of time at least, as an international banker.

• • • •

WHILE Europe had been the pioneer of machinism, the United States, helped by war and spurred by the belligerents' needs, launched "mass" production.

The drama for Europe, Mr. Siegfried contends, is that the American form of civilization is proving attractive to South America and to the American form of civilization is proving attractive to South America and to the British Dominions. "It seems doubtless," he declares, "that the white race and the Occidental civilization now have two direction centers: the American and the European ones."

The question of the spiritual direction of the world seems no less disturbing to Mr. Siegfried.

"We have to admit," he says, "that, in conquering the world, we have brought it more materialistic energy than religious spirit. • • • The civilization we represent is directed in fact toward a better organization of life, for the pursuit of materialistic aims.

"The seed we sow in alien minds—a dangerous seed, maybe—is the revelation, after thousands of years of passively endured hardships, that, after all, one can fight against misery, one can live without too much suffering and existence can even be enjoyed materially. • • • Perhaps, the most tangible results of our teaching are impatience, desire and a craving for comfort."

But, at the same time that the white race developed new appetites in other races, it also gave them the means of satisfying them. Our technique was quickly grasped for all those cheap products that do not demand expert workmanship.

On one hand, the white man's very genius has created so automatic a production that it needs neither skill nor intelligence. On the other hand, those new countries that adopted it, being socially far less evolved, were not hampered by the intricacies of a social legislation.

• • • •

"IN THE present conditions of international competition," Mr. Siegfried asserts, "Europe is beaten on many a field."

She is beaten in Orient and in the Far East as "Asia can underlive Europe." She is beaten in America, exactly for opposite reasons. America's super-equipment, which squeezes every ounce of efficiency out of man, thus accounting for higher wages, has been made possible by the immensity of the American market.

"Europe," the French writer comments, "successfully copies the United States in the scientific organization of production, but geography and political divisions deprive her of the advantages of mass production and her age prevents her from enjoying the carelessness of economic youth."

Europe's future, however, is not absolutely hopeless, Andre Siegfried thinks.

"Over Asia, even including Japan, the old continent has preserved its technical superiority. • • • The real superiority does not lie in using machines but in creating new ones. • • • The question is whether there will remain, in the future, difficult industries.

"In many ways, Europe beats the United States for the same reasons as Asia beats Europe. Europeans are more frugal and less wasting than Americans. But, in addition, quality, difficulty, creative spirit are factors likely to give the European producer an edge over his American competitor."

• • • •

EUROPE is thus in a sort of middle-of-the-road position between the Orient and the Occident, or if you prefer between the Extreme-Orient and the Extreme-Occident. Seen from Asia she looks materialistic and Occidental, while seen from America she looks almost backward.

To hold her own with the rest of the world, she still has her "creative genius and her sense of the spirit which, in fact, may be confused with the old continent's traditional culture. By the force of circumstances, Europe is condemned to be 'superior.' Quality, 'services', international financing, such are the fields where she can show her unquestionable competence."

But, as Mr. Siegfried puts it in his conclusion; will this reduced activity be enough for an entire continent to live on, especially on such a high standard as Europe has reached? This standard may be lower than America's. It is nevertheless considerably higher than Asia's. Europe will do anything in the world to preserve it. But what if she can not? As J. M. Keynes, the British economist, once put it: Men will not always die quietly.

Merchant Guilty In Weight Fraud

Samuel Gevinson Is Fined $100 in Police Court.

A plea of guilty was entered in Police Court yesterday by Samuel Gevinson, of the 100 block of E street, one of five merchants accused by the District Department of Weights and Measures of defrauding persons on relief rolls by short weights in food purchases.

Judge Gus A. Schuldt fined Gevinson $100. Warrants charging four other merchants with similar offenses have been placed in the hands of police in various precincts, but none of those named has appeared in court.

The charge against Gevinson was made by District Superintendent of Weights George M. Roberts, following a lengthy investigation of the sale of food to relief fund recipients. Appearing in court against Gevinson was W. C. Diller, inspector of weights and measures.

Roberts announced last night warrants probably would be issued against two or three more store proprietors.

The First Church was founded in 1779 in an old carpenter shop on the grounds of the present White House estate.

'Gives Me Assurance of Ultimate Objective,' Bishop Writes.

By the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington.

It is not only a question of what religion means to me personally, but what religion means to us corporately. Obviously, religion means to me personally a vital faith in God expressed in a desire on my part to obey His Will. The disciplinary value of religion is indispensable to the regulation of my life and habit. Primarily it gives me the satisfaction of knowing that in some way, possibly beyond my power to define it, my life is "in tune with the infinite." It not only lends dignity to my life, makes more clear to me its purpose, but gives me assurance of its ultimate objective. Sabatier was right when he said: "Man is incurably religious." There is something in our nature that cries out for a "power not of ourselves." Darwin found in his wide search that, in the most barbaric tribes, untutored as they were, there was a definite, if childlike religious conviction. From the most remote times down to the present man has expressed his spiritual yearnings, sometimes in crude but definite ways.

Draws Analogy.

I sometimes think of religion in terms of the boy who was flying his kite in a London street on a day when a dense, yellow fog lay thick over the city. A passer-by, noting the lad holding the string paused and said to him: "What are you doing, boy, holding that string?" to which the lad replied: "Don't you see, I am flying my kite." Looking up through the dense mist the stranger responded: "I can't see any kite, how do you know it's up there?" to which the lad replied: "I know it's up there because I can feel it pulling on the string."

My faith in God is somewhat analogous to what the boy felt concerning his kite. There is something in my nature that responds to an upward pull. Be it my mind, my heart, my emotions, I experience satifaction in responding to that which at times I find difficult adequately to express. No one has so completely defined God to me nor indeed the deeper, finer qualities of my nature as did Jesus of Nazareth. I like that word: "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." The many efforts that Jesus made to reveal to man the will and purpose of the eternal Father furnishes the most satisfying affirmation of which we have knowledge.

Religion means to me that, apart from the many contacts I have with men in the world about me I am privileged through prayer and a daily effort to obey His will, to have companionship with God. It also means that I am conscious of plan and purpose in my life. To use the language of the poet, "Nothing walks with aimless feet;" I may hurt the plan, hinder its high fulfillment, but the older I grow and the more I review the strange and tortuous way by which I have come, the more I realize that where I have consciously yielded to what I believed was God's purpose concerning me, the more satisfactory have been the results.

All this is on the personal side. Religion in its relation to our life, is an essential and indispensable factor in the regulation of our social and economic order. There are no areas of life in which it does not find its distinct place. That Jesus laid down definite rules designed to regulate human conduct is clearly evident. The so-called Golden Rule is in itself a basic principle that, widely recognized and adhered to, must mightily affect all human relationships.

It is difficult in a short space to say what my religion means to me, but in brief it means everything that concerns my physical, mental and spiritual well-being. It means walking with a sense of security through a world of variety and change. I can say as the years multiply, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that great day."

Shoreham Reception Held After Ceremony at Chevy Chase Church.

Miss Edwerta Barbara Beyer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Frederick Beyer, became the bride of Mr. Gaines Homer Gough, son of the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency and Mrs. Eugene H. Gough, on Thursday evening at 6 o'clock, at the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church, when Dr. J. Hillman Hollister officiated at the ceremony. Palms and ferns banked the chancel, and two tall standards filled with American Beauty roses were placed at either side of the altar steps.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white satin and lace, made on long lines with a train. A deep yoke of the lace and long tight satin sleeves had puffs. Her hair was arranged in coronet fashion, and her tulle veil, which fell to the end of her fan-shaped train, was held in place by a single gardenia. She carried a shower bouquet of gardenias and lilies-of-the-valley.

Miss Toler Maid of Honor.

The maid of honor was Miss Elizabeth Toler, of Norfolk, Va., who was gowned in white lace with a de Medici collar and short puffed sleeves, and the flaring skirt had a short train. Her turban was of American Beauty velvet with a halo veil, and slippers to match, and she carried a muff formed of roses. The bridesmaids were Miss Winifred S. Freiot and Miss Bettina Sargent, who wore gowns of white chiffon, made on long graceful lines, with short capes fastened at the back of the neck and edged with tiny ruffles. Their trains were formed of cascades of chiffon ruffles starting at the waist and growing wider as they extended down the skirt. They wore toques of American Beauty velvet with tulle forming the crowns and halo veils, and slippers to match. Both carried muffs of American Beauty roses.

The best man was Mr. Charles Cole, of Chevy Chase, Md., and the ushers were Mr. John B. Adams, of Eldorado, and Mr. Kenneth Patrum, also of Kansas; and Mr. Gerald Paquin and Mr. Raymond Coe, both of Washington.

Reception Follows Ceremony.

A reception followed the ceremony at the Shoreham Hotel for the families, out-of-town guests and a few close friends. The couple were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Beyer, who wore a gown of black lace over taffeta, with a low decolletage and long tight sleeves. Her hat was of velvet and tulle and she wore a corsage of gardenias, and Mrs. Gough, mother of the bridegroom, also wore a gown of black lace with a velvet turban and wore a corsage of orchids.

Mr. Gough and his bride left later for a wedding trip. The latter wore a two-piece brown knit suit with a straw hat to match, and a silver muskrat coat trimmed with beaver. Upon their return to Washington they will make their home at the Boulevard Apartments.

Survey Shows Low Wage Paid Women Clerks

Employment Conditions and Problems Studied by Federal Bureau.

THE LARGEST NUMBER of women office workers are general clerks receiving a median salary of $90 a month, a recently published survey reveals.

The first extensive study of its kind, this survey is issued by the Women's Bureau, United States Department of Labor. It presents the employment conditions and problems of typical women office workers in seven cities—New York, Hartford, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Chicago, Des Moines and St. Louis.

The workers were selected from a number of different offices including banking, insurance, public utilities, mail order, publishing, investment and advertising.

Those who made the survey discovered that with the development of the large modern office, the introduction of machine equipment, and specialization of work, the majority of women carry on detailed clerical duties for extremely low wages.

Large Gain in Personnel.

Contrasted to the more routine jobs, however, were the positions of secretary and supervisor, which offer the best pay and probably the most interesting work to women in office employment. While only a small proportion—less than one-tenth of all the women office workers surveyed—held such positions, in both these lines of work the median salary was over $150 a month.

According to the survey, although there has been a tremendous growth in the number of women office workers in the last two decades, there has been little change in the qualifications demanded of prospective employes.

In all-age groups women with only grammar school education continued to receive lower salaries than women with high school training. While those who have gone beyond high school to college receive the highest salaries of all.

Youth Still Preferred.

The survey revealed, however, that college trained women are not generally desired for office work of a stenographic nature, even though many employers prefer hiring college graduates for secretarial and semiprofessional work.

The survey showed, also, that youth is still of a decided advantage to women seeking office employment. The majority of managers interviewed stated their preference for young women under 25, and some said they made it a policy never to employ women of over 30 or 35 except for special work.

This hiring policy is reflected by the comparatively young ages of women included in the survey, half of whom were under 25. Long experience, however, brings its reward, for women in the study, who had been with their employers a long time—15 years or more—earned almost twice as much as the newcomers, those with less than one year's experience.

Robots to End Our Drudgery, Savant Avers

London (AP).—Robots will perform all the menial tasks of 50 years hence—and the great problem will be how to fill in all the extra hours of leisure.

That is the rosy picture of 1985, as envisioned by Sir Eric Geddes, speaking at the exhibition of arts and handicrafts here.

"I remember when I was a boy that many leisure hours were spent in holding up the public house (saloon) walls," he said. "I don't know how much leisure there will be in 1985, but it will certainly be a problem to provide for the outlet of energy during those extra nonworking hours which will be created as mechanical technique develops."

Sir Michael Sadler, master of University College, Oxford, suggested that "with mass production in industry everywhere advancing with giant strides, there must be a great rebirth of interest in artistic things."

'Ginger and Snap' Mark Accessories for Spring

Paris, Feb. 15 (AP).—Accessories are going to be matters of prime fashion importance this spring, for there are "ginger and snap" in the way they are put together. Here is the way one chic Parisian accents a black and white check suit: Yellow straw hat with black band, yellow blouse and yellow chamois gloves, blue cornflower in the buttonhole, black suede bag and gloves.

Too Many Skin Preparations Harmful, Expert Here Warns

BEWILDERED women who view their dozens of creams and lotions in perplexity will rejoice that one beauty authority maintains simplicity is the keynote to beauty just as it is in dress.

Miss Marty Gilbert, American representative of Madame Scandia Jourde, European dermatologist, emphasizes the fact that the less complicated a beauty treatment the more effective it will be.

This week Miss Gilbert has been interviewed by many Washington women at Michael of the Waldorf's salon at the Willard Hotel.

"I always stress the fact," Miss Gilbert said yesterday, "that too many preparations on the face are just as harmful as too many foods to the stomach. It's the same idea exactly as overeating.

"Suppose you went out and ate a strawberry sundae, a filet mignon, some caramels, a lobster salad and a chicken patty. How would you feel. Certainly no better than your face does after you've put on four or five conflicting oils," she said.

Miss Gilbert says that one good cream, a toner, a stimulating lotion and a protective base are all that one really requires.

At her finger tips the young authority had a list of Mme. Scandia Jourde's European clienetele and readily clipped off such names as Victoria Eugenie, of Spain; Marie, of Rumania; Baroness de Rothschild and in fact dozens of others you'd find in the Alamanac de Gotha.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Adolescent Boy, "Problem Child" and Inadequately Schooled Woman Present Problems Which District Educators Are Called Upon to Solve.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am an occasional reader of your column and I find it very interesting. Your helpfulness to others has caused me to turn to you in my period of mental pain.

* * * *

I am a boy 16 years of age. I used to consider myself intelligent until this problem confronted me. I have tried many ways to solve it, but the more I try the more hopeless it seems. I am a peculiar boy. In everything I do I always think of others first. Of course, this is all right to a certain extent, but I carry it too far.

* * * *

I am adventurous and strong with a clean mind and body. Some people call me lazy because I do things the easiest way. Another thing: I flow with the current and not against it. If that is being lazy, I am.

* * * *

My problem is this. I have reached the saturation point in school and my parents won't let me quit. To quit school is a serious undertaking if you ever expect and hope to amount to anything. I realize that. But there is no hope for me to continue. Since reaching this point I have changed schools twice, thinking the school had something to do with it. Remember, I said "saturation point with school," not with education.

* * * *

I am wondering if self education is any good. I can always grasp the meaning of things quicker by reading than in a classroom.

My parents seem to think education is the only thing in life. I laugh at that, for if it is, life is very cock-eyed and I don't care for it. I don't wish to buck the world alone, but if it wasn't for the feeling I have for my parents I would have given up my good home for freedom of mind long ago.

* * * *

My parents have sacrificed much for both my education and my happiness. This makes things more difficult for me. The trouble is I have no one who understands me. No man could. It has to be a woman. This is my problem. Perhaps you can help me. LOST.

* * * *

DEAR LOST: The greatest help I can give you, I believe, is to refer you to a woman whose name I have had occasion to use a number of times in this column recently, Miss Bertie Backus, assistant superintendent of District public schools. Miss Backus' office is at the Franklin School, Thirteenth and K streets northwest, and she can be reached by telephoning NAtional 6000.

As head of a character education project conducted in connection with Washington's public schools, Miss Backus is thoroughly conversant with problems such as yours. She is, moreover, an amiable and sympathetic person and has assured me she will be glad to go over your problem with you. It may encourage you to know she has had occasion to consider hundreds of such problems in her career as educator, and her experience has been that almost invariably they can be worked out to the entire satisfaction of the student.

If, after talking with Miss Backus, you feel there is any further help I can give you, please call upon me. M. H.

Neglected Her Schooling.

DEAR WORRIED: I was most interested in the letter from "Uneducated" in Wednesday's paper. My schooling has been neglected and I am conscious of my ignorance all the time. Would it be possible for me to get in touch with Miss Bertie Backus, and see if she could help me, as I am most unhappy.

WORRIED.

* * * *

DEAR WORRIED: Since I answered "Uneducated's" first letter on February 5, commending her to the good offices of Miss Backus, the latter has been the recipient of a number of requests for educational helps, similar to yours, presented to her independent of this column.

* * * *

There is nothing to prevent your doing likewise. Put since I feel a personal responsibility in adding to the duties of this already heavily-burdened professional woman, I must point out, in fairness to her, that only those who have or are seeking some definite educational objective are justified in asking her aid.

* * * *

If one's personal or professional advancement hinges on mastering certain courses of study; or if a given course of study is failing to supply essential knowledge and preparation, Miss Backus is willing to consider the problem and suggest the remedy. But to be afflicted with a vague discontent with one's past schooling and present culture is insufficient justification for petitioning her assistance. Such persons might be better pleased, and equally helped, by applying to the Central branch of the public library, at Eighth and K streets northwest, and consulting with the readers' advisers.

However, in regard to your own case—if you feel the only solution to your problem lies in embarking on a regulation course of study, by all means talk with Miss Backus. I have already told in a foregoing paragraph of this column, how she may be reached. M. H.

What of Problem Child?

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: May I inquire how one enrolls one's child in classes affiliated with Washington's character education project? I have a child who is very much of a problem and would value the cooperation of this clinic. I hear I should write to Miss Bertie Backus, but was advised first to write to you. With many thanks, sincerely,

EDITH M.

* * * *

DEAR EDITH M.: Character education experts with whom I have advised concerning your problem tell me your first move should be a heart-to-heart talk with the principal of the school in which your child is enrolled, providing the child is attending school. The principal is prepared to put you in contact with the proper agencies for helping your child overcome physiological or psychological handicaps.

* * * *

Parents of problem children of pre-school age are advised to enlist the cooperation of the Child Guidance Clinic at the Henry School, Seventh and P streets northwest, conducted by the District Council of Social Agencies. And in either case, an excellent person to consult is Miss Jessie LaSalle, who is affiliated with the research department of Washington's public schools. She may be reached by telephoning National 6000.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write to her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

"Baby Congressmen's" Wives Impress Their Elders on "Hill"

Bring Youthful Beauty, Pep and Personality to Official Set; Mrs. Ryan a Factor in Husband's Race for House Seat.

By Mary Greiner Kelly.

WITH ITS MEMBERS ages decreasing every session, Congress finds youth in the saddle on Capitol Hill. Ranging in age (for the most part) from the 40's to the middle 20's, the once quite elderly House of Representatives now presents a youthful appearance.

The same youthful complexion is reflected in the Congressional Club. Young, pretty and peppy, the wives of the "baby" Congressmen have literally taken the Capitol by storm. They have, their elders say, after the first look, what it takes to go places on their own initiative. This most of them have done before, they ever reached Washington.

There is dainty Mrs. Elmer J. Ryan, of Minnesota, for example, whose 27-year-old husband is the youngest member of the House. Fairly charged with pep and personality, the blue-eyed, brown-haired Mrs. Ryan will converse fluently upon anything but herself, with friends who find her at home in an attractive Wardman Park Hotel apartment.

"Just a country school teacher," is how she laughingly dismisses her activities before she was married to Representative Ryan in September, 1933.

Successful Rural Teacher.

"And about a dozen other grand things," chimes in Mr Ryan, who is strangely enough, more impressed with his wife's abilities than with his own remarkable entry into Congress—the only Democrat elected from a rock-ribbed Farmer-Labor State.

"In the first place," Mr. Ryan explained, "she was a successful country school teacher. And if you don't think that takes exceptional ability, just try and be one. Not only must you teach everything to the first eight grades, from manual training to millinery, but you have to be a natural-born politician to hold your job. It takes much more versatility to get by in the rural district than it does in the city schools. Contacts are closer with children and parents, demands more exacting."

Following her country school experience, Mrs. Ryan accepted a position with the Rosemount, Minn., school system, teaching the intermediate grades.

"While she rested," Mr. Ryan explained dryly, "she led a Girl Scout troop, coached numerous dramatic productions, took a hand in supervising school publications and experimented with one of her hobbies, landscape gardening."

The Ryans met at Rosemount in March, 1933. They married six months later and with the election of Mr. Ryan as city attorney of South St. Paul, they moved to that city.

Studied Gardening.

Here Mrs. Ryan joined the Dakota County Democratic Women's Club and proved her capabilities as an organizer and worker. On the side she went seriously into the study of landscape gardening. Her home experiments won the commendation of several professional authorities.

Nine days after the primaries last year, Elmer J. Ryan, jr., otherwise known as Jimmie, hung his bonnet in the Ryan home. He was old enough by the time the general election campaign rolled around to accompany his parents on the stump. While Mr. Ryan did the speaking from the platform, and Jimmie held up the rear by sleeping angelically in his bassinet, Mrs. Ryan met and remembered the names of the voters.

"Which is another of her valuable assets," Representative Ryan concluded, "developed through her experience as a country school teacher."

Another champion recaller of names and faces is Mrs. D. Worth Clark, beautiful wife of the 32-year-old Representative from Pocatello, Idaho. She is enthusiastic over attending Congress.

"It is just like going to school again, except that the 'students' in the gallery are thrown upon their own initiative," she said, "Ear and eye training, also, as mental concentration are required in order to get all one should out of this incomparable course in civics."

Mrs. Clark, like Mrs. Ryan, taught school before her marriage. A graduate of the University of Oklahoma, she was frequently cast as leading lady in campus dramatic productions Dramatics, in fact, was her principal hobby both as a student and as a teacher.

Instructing for three years in the Pocatello, Idaho, schools, she was called upon to coach plays and supervise programs during her spare time.

Mrs. Clark, now at home at the Shoreham Hotel, is the mother of two daughters, Nelen Noel, 5, enrolled in the Oyster Kindergarten, and Nancy Lee, 7, attending the Immaculata Seminary. Both have already demonstrated a flair for acting, and originate amusing skits of their own.

Then there is Mrs. Vito Marcantonio, attractive and gifted wife of the 31-year-old Representative from Mayor LaGuardia's district in New York City. With a noteworthy career of welfare activity already to her credit, Mrs. Marcantonio looks forward with the idea of simply playing this winter. A hiking enthusiast, she has already taken in most of the city's points of interest on foot.

"It's so much fun discovering Washington by one's self," she said yesterday. "The congressional sessions are a bit trying to the outsider. However, they must be tremendously interesting to members who are part of it all, and feel they are accomplishing something for their constituents."

Champions Underprivileged.

A graduate of the University of New Hampshire, Mrs. Marcantonio has devoted her life since graduation to work among the underprivileged. Her first job was at the Jamaica Plain Neighborhood House in Boston, where she worked with boys' and girls' clubs, refereed children's sports and took charge of a summer camp.

There was a brief space later where she specialized in boys' recreational activities at a New Haven summer camp. The next step was to Chicago, where at the Chicago Recreational School, she demonstrated rare versatility in child work by dealing successfully with one of the most cosmopolitan groups in the country.

It was at the famous Haarlem House, in New York City's "Little Italy" where she, the former Miriam Sanders, met the present Representative Marcantonio.

"Mr. Marcantonio was teaching the Italian people how to be good American citizens," Mrs. Marcantonio observed. "I taught the Italian children how to play. My task, especially during the depression, became the harder task of the two. It is not so easy to play with hunger staring one's family in the face. But times are better in that district now."

Spending a day of one's honeymoon as a privileged guest on the floor of the House of Representatives was the experience accorded Mrs. Joseph P. Monaghan, whose 28-year-old husband was the "baby of the House" last session. He was then 26 and pretty Mrs. Monaghan, who accompanied him here from Butte, Mont., as his bride, was just 22.

Specialized in Music.

"It scarcely seems real now, that first day in Congress," Mrs. Monaghan recalled. "Mr. Monaghan looked like such a youngster in the midst of all those older men. I was glad they let me sit there to keep him company. It's different this year, though, for there are several in the House who look just as young as he does."

Specializing in music in Portland, Oreg., after she finished school in Butte, Mrs. Monaghan is keeping up her interest in this art.

With two small boys, aged 3 and 2 years, her principal hobby in life, Mrs. W. Sterling Cole, of New York, wife of the "baby" Republican member of the House, has not as yet found time to move to Washington.

"She'll like it here when she comes," however," volunteered her 30-year-old husband in his office on Capitol Hill. "She is really more interested in her home than anything else in the world, though."

Speed.

The wily declarer has any number of advantages and one of them is the ability to think faster than the opponents. It is a well known fact that one of the best ways of securing necessary tricks when no other line of play offers much chance, is to give the enemy an opportunity to make a mistake. This is commonly done by putting them into the lead before they have an accurate picture of the hand. It can also be done by playing the hand as if there were no problem to lure opponents into careless play.

In today's hand declarer decided that speed offered him his best chance to make a difficult contract.

South, Dealer.

1♠	Pass	3♡	Pass
3♠	Pass	4♣	Pass
4◇	Pass	4♡	Pass
4♠	Pass	6♠	Pass

The Play.

The opening lead was a small club, and good play dictated that declarer finesse. East won with the King and returned a low diamond, and South played the Ace. It was necessary to lose no trump tricks. There were three possibilities of running the trumps without loss. One was a doubleton Queen-Jack in either hand; another was three to the Queen-Jack in the East hand, so that the double finesse would work; and the last depended upon East making a mistake.

Declarer decided that he might well combine the shot for the doubleton Queen-Jack with a play upon the opponents. He, therefore, led a club round, after taking the diamond Ace, discarded a diamond on the third club, and led a fourth round of clubs, all these plays being made very quickly. East, of course, could have slowed up at this point and given thought before playing to the fourth club. But not being a very careful player, he decided in a split second that it was imperative not to permit declarer to get another discard on the fourth round of clubs, and foolishly trumped with a small spade. Declarer overruffed with the eight-spot and the Ace and King of spades drew all of the trumps.

If East had stopped to think he would have realized that three top hearts were available to declarer for discards as well as the clubs and that even if it were necessary to trump, the ruff with the Jack would be the better play.

What TODAY Means

By Mary Blake.
"Aquarius."

IF FEBRUARY 16 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11:45 a. m. to 1:45 p. m., from 4:45 to 6:45 p. m. and from 8:45 to 10:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 9:45 to 11:45 a. m., from 1:45 to 3:45 p. m. and from 6:45 to 8:45 p. m.

There may exist on February 16 a tendency to draw rather strongly upon the imagination. Be careful in conversations that conditions or happenings are not exaggerated, as someone with embarrassing frankness may correct any too highly colored statement. Any form of social relaxation should prove very delightful. It will not only be good taste, but also excellent judgment, to keep off of any business subjects while enjoying or extending hospitality to friends.

Great care should be exercised where water sports of any sort are indulged in, especially skating, iceboat sailing, or other activities taking place on ice. February 16 should be a good one on which to make requests of a reasonable nature. Happenings of a decidedly agreeable character probably will make this a delightful day for you. Married and engaged couples, as well as those basking in the love-light of someone's eyes, will make a grave mistake if they resort to a form of teasing to get a favor granted.

If a woman, and February 16 is your natal day, be prepared to receive callers on that date, as there is a likelihood you will be surprised at your popularity. You probably are a great lover of Nature in all her varying moods. Life outside of the confines of a large city may be conducive to a greater degree of contentment than if you live within it. The Horn of Plenty probably will pour its gifts bountifully into your lap. One of the most precious of all possessions you may have will be an abundance of love. Husband and home should symbolize for you complete happiness.

The child born on February 16 will, possibly when it reaches its 'teens, evince keen interest in historical, scientific, or artistic research work, which may result in a career along a similar line of activity.

If a man, and February 16 is your birthday, the soil may always exercise a potent influence on both your character and your habits. Agricultural pursuits, hunting, exploring, mining, geology, mineralogy, or forestry, should be fascinating if taken up seriously. A home and family are probably essential for your complete contentment, but you should not marry until you are thoroughly satisfied to settle down, as well as ready to conform with the demands of matrimonial life.

Franklin W. Fiske, theologian and educator.

Glass Slipper Of Cinderella Now a Reality

Paris, Feb. 15 (AP).—Cinderella's glass slipper has stepped from fairy tale lore into the modern everyday world.

It's the latest and most striking thing in fashion footnotes since the tall puss-in-boots shoes loomed on the style horizon last fall. It's designed for only the most brilliant of balls—though it can stay until after the clock strikes twelve—and it will flash as brilliantly from limousines as did its original from the pumpkin coach.

This is the way it's made: Bits of shimmering glass cut to reflect the light are strung along transparent mica straps across the top of the foot while the tip of the toes and the instep are left bare. More strips of glittering glass gird the heel attached to a pale pink kid ankle strap and a tall pink kid spike heel. So, except for the heel and ankle strap, it gives the effect of a foot held by a few twinkling glass bands.

'Zippers' Lend Smooth Line To Fastenings test Application of Novel Buttoner Aids Milady's Evening Gown.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

ONE OF THE MOST modern little contributors to efficiency and comfort is nothing less than the slide fastener, frequently called the "zipper."

Forty-one years ago it was just an idea in the mind of one W. L. Judson, mechanical genius. In 1893 Col. Lewis Walker, head of a large manufacturing concern, became interested in the idea.

After 25 years of experiment and the expenditure of $1,000,000 the fastener was perfected.

It gained world-wide prominence during the war, when it was used on soldiers' money belts and on aviation equipment.

In 1923 it was used on overshoes—and it was at this time the name "zipper" came to apply to it.

Tile Stands for Windows.

Little tile stands barely 3 inches high, and just about 5 inches square make an attractive setting for the numerous flower pots which constitute the housewife's winter "garden."

These tile stands will fit on the window sill or you might prefer them on the table. Perhaps you'd like to combine them with tile tables which match the stands themselves. The small stands are only 59 cents each and the tables $1.29.

You'll find them available in a variety of colors, solid or combined.

Baking Shells Displayed.

If you want to give your lobster imperial or your crab cakes a real seaside background you might try some of the baking shells on display in the household department of a downstown store. These are amply large for a generous helping of seafood. The cost, only 25 cents for three.

Vienna Skin Expert Here.

As long as wrinkles mar feminine beauty women will be seeking a means to remove them. That is why Monday will be a red letter day to many, as a certain Viennese doctor will be at a well known beauty salon to give his perfected plastic mask treatments.

If you're interested, don't wait until Monda yto call, because his engagement book is already showing a long list of names.

And if you haven't the time to spare for a thorough facial going-over, don't call, for the doctor insists on an hour or two at least for each patient. Although the treatment varies according to the individual, generally speaking it's like this: First a steaming of the face under a special steaming mask, then a thorough cleansing of the face, a massaging of the muscles, and when necessary the use of a violet ray. Next an application of a vibrator to the spinal column. This sets up a stimulation, which is furthered by unusual muscle strapping. Last, of course, the mask istelf. Its healing and medicating properties are said to remove all vestige of impurities and blemishes.

After the treatment you're bound to look years younger. The cosmetician who has invited the doctor to be guest of his salon that day insists that women who are 55 look 10 or 15 years youpnger, and those who are 40 look 30 after a treatment. He says that a very young woman may insure her face against the inroads of wrinkles with a plastic mask treatment now.

Dresser Sets Cheap.

The three-piece dresser sets which are given such a striking display in a local store are the victims of a fall in price. Only recently they were selling for "quite a sum" but now it's hand-clapping time for they're reduced to $4.85.

There's a comb, a brush and a mirror, and these are in black, blue, pink, and orchid, trimmed in chrome or crystal.

Since there are only a limited number of sets left it will pay you to buy while the buying is good.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

THE simplest puzzles often offer the greatest entertainment, and they are doubly satisfactory if a child has a part in making them. Clipping picture post cards into odd shapes, to fit them together for a jig-saw puzzle, is a pleasing pastime.

This game can be played by a single child. Clip each picture post card into a dozen pieces, keeping each card in a separate envelope for future use. Or it can be adapted as a party game. In that case, give each guest an envelope containing one card, clipped into pieces, and award a small prize for the one who puts the separate parts together to form the picture first.

Pictures from advertisements in magazines, mounted on cardboard, can be used the same way, but the post cards are eminently satisfactory and less trouble to handle.

This is just one of many amusements that a mother can devise from the materials at hand in any home.

Cocktail Apron Is Ideal For Duties in Kitchen

Pattern No. 871.

THE good hostess looks her prettiest. The good hostess occasionally supervises those after-the-guests-assemble little jobs in the kitchen. What can she wear? This cocktail apron, of course. It is pretty, dainty and flattering. And it completely protects any perishable frock.

This is a "Sew-Simple" design—quickly and easily made. The cost of the material is nominal. And the saving of wear and tear on good clothes is a budget item to be considered. It is wise, of course, to select a material that will stand a lot of washing. The pattern is designed in sizes 14 to 44. Yardage requirements are given on the envelope.

Mrs. Eugene Keyes Wins First Prize in Pie Contest

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE number of excellent recipes received this week in The Post's recipe contest proves that women in this part of the country really know how to make good pies. Here are the prize winners and their recipes:

First prize, $3, is awarded Mrs. Eugene Keyes, Maple avenue, Kensington, Md., for her recipe for orange sheer pie. Second prize, $2, goes to Mrs. Eva A. Krey, 917 Sixth street northwest, for her recipe for black and white cream pie, and third prize, $1, to Miss J. M. Heller, Boxwood Gardens, 88 Sixth street, Eastport, Md., for her recipe for chicken pie.

Honorable mention is awarded Mrs. Jack Hurt, Waldorf, Md., for her recipe for cocoanut fluff pie; Mrs. G. W. Meuth, 4831 Thirty-sixth street, for her recipe for rhubarb pie; Mrs. Susie Merton, Haymarket, Va., for her recipe for almond delight pie, and to Mrs. Stuart Bryan, 4514 Connecticut avenue, for her recipe for chocolate meringue pie.

The above recipes follow in the order mentioned.

Orange Sheer Pie.

2 tablespoons gelatin
4 egg yolks
1 cup orange juice
Grated rind ½ lemon
2 tablespoons water
2-3 cup sugar
3 tablespoons lemon juice
3 drops almond extract
Pinch salt.

Soak gelatin in water five minutes. Beat egg yolks until light, add sugar, lemon and orange juice. Cook over hot water until slightly thick. Add gelatin and cool. When it begins to thicken, pour in stiffly beaten egg whites. Pour in cooked pie shell. Serve with whipped cream, sprinkle with crushed almonds.

Black and White Cream Pie.

Crust—Crisp cookies, such as gingersnaps, vanilla wafers, etc., to make 1 1-3 cups, five tablespoons melted butter.

Filling:
1 tablespoon gelatin
4 tablespoons cold water
2 cups milk
½ cup sugar
½ teaspoon salt
1½ tablespoons cornstarch
4 egg yolks
1½ squares chocolate, melted
1 teaspoon vanilla
4 egg whites
½ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla or almond extract.

Roll the cookies fine. Add melted butter and mix well. Pat out evenly in a deep 9-inch pie pan and bake 10 minutes in a slow oven (300 degrees F.). Cool. Soak the gelatin in cold water. Scald the milk. Combine sugar, salt and cornstarch. Beat the egg yolks and add the scalded milk slowly, then stir in salt and cornstarch. Cook in double boiler, stirring occasionally until custard generously coats spoon. Remove from fire and take out one cup of custard. To this add the melted chocolate and vanilla. Beat with rotary egg beater and set aside to chill. When cool pour into the crust. While the remaining custard is still hot, blend in the gelatin. Then cool, but do not allow to stiffen. Make a stiff meringue with the egg whites and sugar and fold into the custard. Add the flavoring and when chocolate mixture has begun to set, pour over it the souffled custard mixture. Chill in the refrigerator two hours before serving.

Chicken Pie.

Sever one good sized frying chicken at the joints, cutting the breast in half. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, dip each piece in flour and fry in hot fat, half butter and half white flake or Crisco. Fry a golden brown on both sides, then turn the gas low and with lid on, let simmer until almost done. Put enough water to cover the chicken into the pan and let simmer again until chicken is done.

Make your pie crust, line a deep pie dish, put in chicken and gravy and make a covering of pie crust. With a knife make several small openings in the top, pie crust to allow escape of steam. Bake in a moderate oven until pastry is a golden brown.

Coconut Fluff Pie.

3 egg yolks, slightly beaten
1 cup milk
¼ cup cold water
½ cup coconut
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ cup sugar
1 tablespoon gelatin
3 egg whites beaten stiff
½ teaspoon lemon extract

Cook the yolks, sugar and milk in an enameled double boiler until custard consistency. Have the gelatin sprinkled on the cold water in a bowl and when the gelatin is softened, stir into the cooling custard mixture.

Let cool and when the mixture begins to congeal fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites, coconut and flavoring. Pour into the previously baked pie crust and chill. Sprinkle thick with toasted coconut, made by browning shredded coconut in a shallow pan in the oven.

Rhubarb Pie.

Moisten two tablespoons corn starch with a little cold water and cook it until clear in one-half cup boiling water. Pour this over one cup sugar and a lump of butter the size of a small egg. After it cools, add the juice of one lemon, the well-beaten yolks of three eggs and one cup thick stewed rhubarb, made quite sweet. Bake in one crust, ten minutes in a hot oven to set crust and then reduce heat to moderate until filling is firm. Top with meringue made from egg whites.

AIR STEWARDESS

By VIDA HURST

LIGHT began to dawn upon Irene. This then was the reason for the drained gasoline tank. Eve probably fancied herself in love again.

"She didn't tell me a word about it, Barney. She was asleep when I got home."

"She could have left a note for you."

"Well, if she did, I didn't see it. What was your message?"

"I wanted you to plan to have lunch with me today."

She smiled at him as if he were the answer to all her dreams.

"Well, now that I'm here it doesn't matter, does it? Wait until I've turned in my reports."

He had his own car today, and they drove away from the airport to a roadside lunchroom. Scarcely conscious of what they ate, they discussed the thrilling occurrences of the past week, Barney's rescue and all that had happened since.

The convicts had been captured at Salt Lake and would soon be safely inside San Quentin prison. Nothing personal was said, but blue eyes met green and flashed their own declaration bolder than words.

Afterward they drove down a deserted road between rows of orange trees, and Barney parked the car.

"I owe you an apology, Irene. I came the very next night to tell you so," he said boyishly, "but you weren't at home."

Strange how little that mattered now that she was with him again.

"I know I hurt your feelings that night at the beach," he admitted. "I wanted to hurt you."

"But, Barney, why?"

"Because I love you," he blurted. "And always will even if you are engaged to someone else."

"But, Barney, I'm not."

"Do you mean that?"

"Of course! Whatever made you think I was engaged?" she demanded.

"That Saturday afternoon when I was waiting for you to come home, Eve said you were going to marry Peggy Reagan's brother."

"Well, I'm not! I was engaged a long time ago to an interne at the hospital, but that was over before I'd even met you."

Barney's arms were about her. Barney's lips pressed against her cheek.

"Can you imagine how I felt when I had come that very afternoon to tell you I loved you? I thought you were making a sap out of me. Kissing me and pretending to like me when you were really in love with another man."

"You poor darling!" she murmured, drawing his lips down to hers. "No wonder you were so mean."

For a little while they were lost in a world of their own. The spell Barney had always been able to cast over her wrapped them both in a silence satisfying and complete.

Too Dumb to Realize.

"I love you so much," he whispered. "Tell me that you love me, too."

"I do, darling! I did the first time we played tennis together, although I was too dumb to realize it."

"When did you realize it?" the pilot asked.

"Not until I had a chance to marry the man I thought I had loved for over three years. I knew then it was you I really wanted."

"I wanted you the minute I saw you."

Irene held his face between her hands.

"Be honest, Barney! That first kiss was to satisfy your curiosity just as you said it was."

He grinned and drew her back into possessive arms.

Proposal at Last.

"That may have been my idea before I did it, but when I kissed you I was as much surprised as you were. You were so sweet it took me off my feet."

"I had never been kissed like that before," she admitted.

"Will you marry me, sweet? Are you willing to give up flying to be a flier's wife?"

Forgotten then were all the arguments she had given Stephen, but before she could tell him so Barney suddenly pushed her from him and grasped the wheel.

"My gosh, I forgot we have to make that 4 o'clock plane."

"Are you taking me back, Barney?"

"I am if we can make it."

Confident that they would, she snuggled beside him.

Later flying north past a resplendent sunset into a billowing gold-tipped sea which darkened with every speeding mile, Irene thought of her lover, alert and watchful in the cockpit. Trained to meet any emergency, calm in the face of danger, the lives of every passenger in that plane rested in his youthful hands.

"It's a profession for the young," Irene decided proudly. "One place where youth is in demand. And it is the most thrilling profession in the world, but I will gladly give it up to be Mrs. Barney O'Sullivan."

The plane swooped lower. The lights of San Mateo and Palo Alto began to ripple beneath them, and Irene rose and went competently about her business.

Post Launches Cake Frosting Prize Contest

A PERFECTLY made garment doubles a person's charm and the same rule may be applied to the frosting of a cake. If the frosting is not good, the cake will lose half its appeal.

Next week The Post's recipe contest will be devoted entirely to recipes for cake frosting or icing. How do you make that bittersweet chocolate frosting that will cut without crumbling? What do you do to keep your white icing the consistency of soft marshmallows? Perhaps you have a secret formula that insures the success of your frosting. Send in your best cake frosting recipe, because it may win a prize.

All recipes should be sent to Dorothea Duncan, Home Economics Editor of The Washington Post. Three prizes will be awarded, $3 for the best recipe, $2 for the second best and $1 for the third best. Only one recipe from each contestant will be considered.

Meat Readily Digestible With Potatoes, Tests Show

By Irving S. Cutter.

MANY of our school children have read the thrilling story of Dr. William Beaumont, the Army surgeon, and his patient, Alexis St. Martin. As the result of a gunshot wound, St. Martin had a stomach fistula or opening, by means of which Beaumont, for the first time in the history of the world, was able to study stomach digestion. The account of his experiments, published at Plattsburg, N. Y., in 1833, is a medical classic.

During the past generation scores of scientific laboratory workers have added much to our knowledge of foods and their behavior in the digestive tract in health and in disease. Physicians today fully appreciate that a study of foods makes for a clearer understanding of the behavior of the body. Furthermore, they know of the important influence foods have upon body resistance and the maintenance of good health.

A short time ago Martin E. Rehfuss called attention to one of the doctrines of the food faddists, namely, that proteins (fats) and carbohydrates (starches and sugars) should not be used in the same meal, on the ground that proteins require an acid medium for digestion, whereas carbohydrates require an alkaline medium.

Later, Rehfuss, in collaboration with other workers, studied gastric digestion in both health and disease, with the following conclusions: 1. There is no scientific evidence to show that even in persons suffering from disease there is the slightest incompatibility between proteins and carbohydrates; 2. in a group of persons suffering from various chronic diseases, meat was digested in approximately 3 hours and 51 minutes; meat plus potato in 3 hours and 54 minutes; meat plus potato plus fats in 4 hours and 2 minutes; 3. the total amount of acid present in the stomach when these three diets were employed was adequate for digestion. In other words, it requires three minutes more to digest meat and potato than meat alone and eight minutes more to digest meat, potato and fat than meat and potato. One may well ask what it is all about, since the next meal isn't due for approximately two hours.

It all goes to show that the balanced ration which, by the way, most people use and flourish on is the best; that while many persons no doubt overeat, yet there is reason to believe that senseless starvation or confining oneself to one particular type of food is not only unnecessary, but unsound.

The Sunday Post "Parade of Youth" Is Great!

That's the verdict of thousands of boys and girls . . . and grown folks, too, applaud it!

From a Teacher

May I congratulate you and your staff, or rather may I congratulate the children of Washington, that there is at last being placed before youthful readers a newspaper addressed particularly to them, their interests and their level of comprehension. All success to the Parade of Youth.

The subject matter selections are very very good. Wholesome news is presented in clear and correct English.

Around the World in News, Science, Exploration and Aviation is especially fine, I think. The map is clever; the information interesting and vital. A fine idea!

Wings of the World is an excellent aviation column, and Book of the Week a heartening gesture to stimulate children's interest in reading.

The Fun Corner is wholesome and ethical. And Thunderbolt, the serial, is a very interesting thriller, containing no violation of ethics as far as I can see, and slang is minimized.

I shall follow the Parade of Youth with interest and enthusiasm.

A Camp Fire Leader

Congratulations on the Parade of Youth.

I think that you have gotten up a splendid publication. It is interesting to adults as well as children, I find. And that two-page spread, "Around the World in News, Science, Exploration and Aviation," has a marvelous scope.

Revenue Bill Introduced In Maryland

Tax Measure Sponsored by Gorfine; Million Return Estimated.

Law to Allow Sunday Films in Allegany Is Proposed.

By Francis O. White, Jr.
(Staff Correspondent of The Post).

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—Introduction of another revenue-producing measure, a proposal to legalize Sunday motion pictures in Allegany County, and a bill making it a felony for motorists to lay down smoke screens on State highways, were placed on file today before the Maryland General Assembly closed the seventh week of its labors and adjourned until Monday night.

Other features of the day's activities outside of legislative halls included a conference between representatives of Virginia and Maryland on Potomac River legislation as affecting the oyster industry, and the boundary line controversy, and Gov. Harry W. Nice's announcement that five additional administration bills, affecting State elections, State offices and collection of taxes, will be ready for presentation to the Senate Monday night.

The new revenue measure which was received in the House, sponsored by Speaker Emanuel Gorfine, is designed to levy a tax of 10 per cent on the wholesale price of any proprietary or patent medicines sold in original containers by manufacturers or wholesalers, to retail dealers. Speaker Gorfine estimated the proposal would produce $1,000,000 annually.

Moving Picture Bill.

The Sunday moving picture bill for Allegany County was offered by Delegate C. William Braer of the county delegation. The existing law prohibiting Sunday movies would be repealed under terms of the new proposal, and a tax of 5 cents would be levied against tickets sold for Sunday exhibitions. The net revenue would be split on a 50-50 basis between the county commissioners, and governmental bodies of the respective towns. Where movie shows are operated outside of corporate limits all revenue would go to the county. The bill provides that the county commissioners shall use all revenue for the benefit of crippled children of the county.

Senator Robert V. Cooksey, Republican, Charles County, introduced the proposed "smoke screen" law. Violations would be punishable by imprisonment of from 1 to 5 years under terms of the bill.

A bill offered in the House by Delegate Percy E. Thomas paves the way for Queen Annes County to avail itself of the benefits of the Federal Public Works Administration loan of $4,880,000,000. The measure is designed to eliminate the county from those to which the act passed at the legislative session of 1933 does not apply.

The five administration bills to be offered in the Senate Monday by Senator J. David Baile, Republican, Carroll County, minority floor leader, briefly summarized, are:

Placing appointment and general supervision of the State police force directly under the Governor's office. The commissioner of motor vehicles now has such jurisdiction.

Creating a three-man conservation commission, and abolishing the office of conservation commissioner; the chairman to receive $3,500 annually, and the other members, $2,500 each.

Creating a three-man advisory board of parole and abolishing the office of parole commissioner; chairman's salary, $3,000; other commissioners, $2,500.

Authorizing tax collectors to receive tax payments in installments.

Repealing the section of the election law providing that any citizen who takes up domicile in another State abandons his legal residence in Maryland, unless he makes affidavit that he does not intend to change his residence.

Local Measures.

Among a group of local measures passed by the Senate and sent to the House were the following:

Authorizing the liquor control boards of Wicomico and Worcester Counties to purchase from non-resident producers and dealers any alcoholic beverages, and to import beverages for resale; providing for payment of taxes in Wicomico County in four installments; authorizing municipal officials of Cumberland to issue $50,000 to build and equip a central fire station; providing a contingent fund for Cumberland; providing a 30-hour week of six hours per day for all municipal employes of Cumberland; requiring pawnbrokers of Hagerstown to make a daily itemized report to the chief of police of all articles left with them, and authorizing the city council of Hagerstown to contribute to the Washington County Hospital Association.

The House passed the bill by Senator Stedman Presscot, Montgomery County, to increase the county police force to 30, and providing for the retention of certain members of the present force. This measure now goes to the Governor for his approval.

Speaker Emanuel Gorfine announced the appointment of Worth H. Manlove (Democrat), Cecil County, to the committee on Chesapeake Bay and tributaries, in place of William E. Briscoe (Democrat), also of Cecil, who, because of continued illness, has been prevented from participating in deliberations of that group.

Routine activities in the respective branches today included the following:

Senate.

By Joseph A. Coad, St. MarysCounty—Bill fixing the bond of the treasurer of Leonardtown.

By Robert B. Kimble, Allegany County—Bill limiting the length of railroad trains operated in the State. Freight trains would be restricted to 70 cars, exclusive of the caboose; passenger trains to 14 cars, and mixed trains not more than 70.

By Ernest P. Miller, Washington County—Bill to legalize bookmaking in Hagerstown.

House.

By Charles Carroll, Jr., Howard County—Bill to reduce the excise tax on wines from $1.10 to 10 cents per gallon.

By Charles A. Davis, Wicomico County—Bill requiring all teachers in public schools to subscribe to the oath of allegiance to the United States.

By J. Milton Dick, Allegany County—Bill to amend the State mining code to require operators of mines to pay employes on the tenth and twenty-fifth of each month; failure to comply would be subject to a fine of 3 per cent of the wages due and unpaid.

Conservation officials of Maryland and Virginia today discussed with the Senate Chesapeake Bay and tributaries committee oyster legislation affecting waters of Potomac River, particularly the proposal to open the river to oystermen using light hand scrapes. Virginia has adopted such a law, and its representatives would have Maryland cooperate along that line.

Meanwhile, bills are pending before both houses of the Maryland Assembly to repeal the act of 1931, which prohibits dredgers operating in the river. This proposal was defeated in 1933.

Participating in today's conference were Richard Armstrong, commissioner of fisheries of Virginia; Dr. W. K. Wellan, of Accomac County, member of the commission; Senator George L. Dougherty, the commission's attorney, and Swepson Earle, Maryland conservation commissioner.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 15 (AP).—The Administration plans to leave Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, adjutant-general of Maryland, in control of the National Guard, without disturbing his salary, it was intimated today at a hearing before the House Ways and Means Committee.

General Reckord appeared before the committee to discuss the budget provisions for the military department. He pointed out that salary cuts of $9,768.60 had been made and urged that some method be worked out to at least restore cuts in the "lower brackets."

"The Governor told me in the presence of several other gentlemen that he was not going to disturb me in control of the military department," Reckord said. "Neither was he going to disturb my salary.

"It appeared to me this matter of pay would be corrected in the supplemental budget and the amount set aside for the adjutant-general be placed back with the ranking line officer."

Old Russia Was Gay, Anti-Red Writer Says

Mme. Ponafidine Sees Bolshevism Failure, Charges Revolt Came From Top; America Told to Be on Guard.

Staunton, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—"Don't try to find the way out in this country through Communism," Mme. Pierre Ponafidine, author of "Russia, My Home," declared in a lecture before the student body of Mary Baldwin College here today.

"If you really knew from experience what the people of Russia went through and are going through, you would be thankful for America and what it stands for," she added.

"Bolshevism is always Bolshevism," the authoress declared. "Bolshevism is not a working force for Russia—it looks upon Russia as a mere battlefield from which to conquer the world for Communism!"

Giving a graphic picture of the old Russia, where she said the peasants were happy and making progess in education and in material things, the speaker contrasted with it the new Russia, in which she said the land has been taken away from the peasants as well as the aristocrats, "individualism is being suppressed, religion is being eradicated and family life is being undermined."

Continuing, she said in part:

"The Russian revolution, which did away absolutely with the old Russian civilization, came from the top of Russian society, not from the bottom. The peasants were not the ones to start it. It was the result of the World War and the propaganda for a separate peace with Germany. If the World War had come at a different time Russia would have had a peaceful political revolution and the democratic reforms in government which had been advocated by thoughtful leaders of Russia for many years. The war paved the way for a radical revolution and the overthrow of the whole system of old Russia.

"Standards of living do not necessarily mean unhappiness. Wealth in the material sense is never a standard of measure. People in the Old Russia may have been poor, but they were not unhappy and they were not mere cogs in a machine.

"The present government may change its policies in some respects. It does allow some ownership of property now. But in some respects it will never change. It stands for the absolute abolition of individuality, for the suppression of the family and for the eradication of the idea of God. Citizens in the Russian state must be mere units in the communistic party. Not only members of the old Russian church, but members of all Protestant churches, have been persecuted under the new regime.

"The Bolshevists plan when the old people of today have died out, to have a communistic state with 160,000,000 solidly loyal citizens. They are educating the children of today to that end. The change which has been made in the Russian children is terrible. The children are taught that they are born for the Communistic Party and owe no responsibility to their parents.

"Their training is entirely in the atheistic spirit, along the lines prescribed by the Soviet Manual for Teachers. In 1932 Stalin made it a death offense to steal grain. Many persons, mainly women, did steal for their starving families. Shock troops of children were then organized to spy on offenders. As a result, many children reported their own parents as offenders and the parents were sentenced to death. Such children were praised as heroes in the official state paper.

"The condition of women has not been improved in Russia with the so-called new freedom. Divorce was almost unknown before the revolution. Now it is very general, with most unfortunate results. The new Russian equality is breaking up the home. Women are now freed from being homemakers to work in the streets and things of that sort. There is real slavery today in Russia."

Miners Saved From Coal Slide

2 Rescued After 16 Hours Imprisonment at Shaft Near Frostburg.

Frostburg, Md., Feb. 15 (AP).—Unhurt after 16 hours imprisonment behind a barrier of coal in the No. 2 mine of the Consolidated Coal Co at Shaft, two miners were brought to the surface this afternoon by rescue crews.

The miners, Christopher Krause, 55, and William Griffith, jr., 30, returned to their families here later. Shaft is located on the Frostburg-Lonaconing road, 2 miles from here.

The two were caught behind a large fall of coal shortly before midnight last night as they started to leave their work. By tapping on the tracks of the coal cars, they indicated they were alive and had plenty of air.

Finding it impractical to bore through the fallen coal to reach the men, five rescue crews began digging from nearby shafts to get behind the blockade. The first crew got through at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Verser Makes Culpeper Visit

Templar Commandery Is Host to Eminent Grand Senior Warden.

Culpeper, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—Marking one of the most important meetings of the year, the Fairfax Commandery, Knights Templar, acted as host today to the eminent grand senior warden, Farrar C. Verser, of Crewe, on his annual visit of inspection.

Other State officers, including Right Eminent Grand Commander Frank G. Payne, of Roanoke, and two past grand commanders, Byrd Leavell, of Culpeper and Washington, and Claude W. Fletcher, of Alexandria, were also present.

The inspection of the commandery, which numbers 121 and is considered one of the most active in the State, began at the Masonic Temple. This was followed by an address by Right Eminent Grand Commander Payne, who was here paying the local commandery an official visit. Supper and a social hour followed.

G. William Mitchell, local commander, announced that many of the members of the Fairfax commandery took part in the meeting of the grand lodge, which was held in Richmond this week. It is estimated that 50 of the local lodge augmented by 15 from the Stevens Lodge in Brandy made the trip. Special interest was centered around a Culpeper man, Dr. Thomas W. Hooper, who was made grand master of the Masons of Virginia.

Members of the advisory committee to work out the centennial plans include A. F. Robertson, the Rev. T. Carter Page, W. A. Bradford, Province McCormick, Miss Emily McCormick, Miss Rose McDonald, Miss Mary Page, Mrs. Richard Whiting, Ernest Meade, Mrs. Thomas E. Blackwell, Mrs. C. O. Dearmont and C. B. Carr.

Meeting Here Today To Weigh Utility Bill

Richmond, Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—H. Lester Hooker, chairman of the legislative committee of the National Association of Railway and Utility Commissioners, today called a meeting of the committee in Washington tomorrow to study the Rayburn bill which would give Congress authority over utility holding companies.

Mr. Hooker, who is a member of Virginia Corporation Commission, said he believed the commissions of all the States "are interested in the measure and I believe the legislative committee of the association will want to study it carefully and make recommendations."

$2,000 Paid Family Hurt In Collision

Dr. Cohen, of Maryland Sanitarium, Makes Settlement.

Hagerstown Physician Sued for $25,000 on Operation.

Westminster, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.). Five damage suits against Dr. Paul Cohen, of the Maryland Tuberculosis Sanatorium, near Sabillasville, Frederick County, resulting from an automobile accident near here on July 2, 1932, were settled here today for $2,000 and judgment entered in favor of the plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Nick Spanos, and their three children, of Baltimore.

Damages totaled $13,000 in the five suits removed to the Carroll County Circuit Court from Frederick County. In the settlement agreed upon late this afternoon after testimony had been heard and before the case was given to the jury, Mrs. Katina Spanos was awarded $1,200; Nick Spanos, $500, and each of the children, $100.

Mrs. Spanos had sued for $5,000; Phyllis Rose, a daughter, for $3,500, and Nick Spanos and two sons, George and Mike Spanos, each for $1,500.

In a case docketed for trial on Monday, Mrs. Estaline Wink Gregory, of Hagerstown, is suing Dr. Lynn Brumback, of Hagerstown, for $25,000 damages. Mrs. Gregory alleges that Dr. Brumback was negligent in performing an operation. The case was removed here from Washington County after a change of venue had been asked by the plaintiff, Mrs. Gregory.

Crash Victim Sues Ice Cream Company

Frederick, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—A suit for $50,000 damages brought by Virgil R. Eaton against the Ebert Ice Cream Co. was entered in the Circuit Court yesterday.

The plaintiff, a salesman, alleges that while crossing the street last June he was knocked down and permanently injured by a truck operated by an agent of the defendant company. Since the accident the State Industrial Accident Commission awarded Eaton compensation. The insurance company paying the compensation is also a plaintiff in the suit.

Fourteen suits, for damages, including several removed from other counties, have been "stetted" after having not been set for trial through several terms of court as required by law. The largest was brought by Harry M. Lease, formerly near Braddock Heights, against S. McKinstry Norris, farmer near Libertytown. Lease alleged that he was shot and seriously injured by Norris at the home of the latter's parents. Norris was tried and found guilty of assault and battery. The suit was brought in August, 1933, but was never tried.

The suit brought by Harry Aaronson against Laura Trumpower and Charles E. Hahn, for $25,000 damages, was also "stetted." The plaintiff alleged that he was struck by a car operated by one of the defendants near Boonsboro and seriously injured. The suit was removed from Washington County.

Opportunity

Flees as 'Phantom' Quits Ex-Policeman's Home.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.). Lieut. of Police Frank K. Williams, retired, is certain that opportunity knocks but once and that he has lost the opportunity of becoming a hero, even though he has been living in retirement as a police officer for several years.

Last night the "phantom" burglar walked into the lieutenant's home while he was reading in a front room. A daughter discovered the man in the kitchen. Instead of summoning her father, she reprimanded the intruder and he soon fled. Her description of the man tallied exactly, said police, with that of the "phantom" burglar, who has broken into 14 homes in the last month.

Banquet Is Held By Farmers' Union

Lemke Addresses Session of Maryland Group.

Westminster, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.). With Representative William H. Lemke, of North Dakota, as principal speaker, the first annual banquet of the Carroll County Farmers' Union was held last night at Sauble's Inn, near Taneytown.

Representative Lemke, in his address, attacked the international bankers, the United States monetary system, a sales tax, crop reduction and the Federal Land Bank, and discussed the proposed Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill, which would provide for refinancing of the farmers' indebtedness at 3 per cent interest, half of which would be applied to principal.

The speaker told the 150 members present that "the stability of government is out here on the farms which you people represent," and asserted that "while there are some fools who think they can spend their way into prosperity, to save a little and be thrifty is still a sound American policy."

America's Oldest Glass Works Crumbling to Earth in Maryland

Products of Amelung's Craftsmanship Prized by Collectors.

Park Mills, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—Nothing but a mound of earth will soon mark the site of America's oldest glass factory. Only colonial crystalware, which fortunately has been preserved in the cases of museums and collectors, will be left as tangible evidence of its contribution to American craftsmanship.

Such is the condition of the former John Frederick Amelung & Co. glass works, which most historians contend was started in 1784, when Amelung and 300 other immigrants from Bremen, Germany, settled along the Monocacy River, not far from Frederick. Today the plant is separated from the concrete highway by 4 miles of dirt road and a half mile of cow path.

The glass factory, built in one of the elbows of Bennetts Creek, close to where it empties its miniature rapids into the Monocacy, soon became one of the most widely known glassware manufactories in the Young County. It grew so prosperous under its frugal German management that before long agencies had been established in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Frederick. The firm specialized in "goblets and other hollow ware," but also turned out material ranging from window panes to optical lenses.

Washington Made Comment.

During one of his trips through Maryland, George Washington wrote the following enthusiastic paragraph to Thomas Jefferson concerning the isolated plant, near the Monocacy:

"A factory of glass is established upon a large scale on the Monacacy River near Frederick, in Maryland. I am informed that it will produce this year glass of various kinds to the amount of ten thousand pounds."

Evidently Washington's enthusiasm and Amelung's respect mated nicely for not long afterward the German immigrant visited Mount Vernon.

Old records tell the story of how Amelung with two "capacious goblets made of flint glass exhibiting the general's coat of arms" made his way across the wide lawn of the famous Virginia home. Encountering a man working diligently in his shirt sleeves upon an old grape arbor near the house, he was amazed to find that it was Washington.

Works Moved to Baltimore.

In 1789 the business volume of the small stone works necessitated its removal to Baltimore. The equipment was set up on the present site of the Charles Baker & Son glass works, near Federal Hill.

The quality of the goblets, punch bowls and other fancy flintstone ware has placed genuine Amelung pieces at a premium among collectors. The sparkle and clearness of this early American crystalware has even defied imitation of modern furnaces.

At the Masonic Lodge in Alexandria, Va., where Washington was a member and first master, many Amelung decanters and punch and wine glasses have been preserved. At the Old Holland Masonic Lodge in New, many pieces attributed to the German's artistry also may be seen.

Krol Bond Case Is Postponed

Forfeiture Question Will Come Up at Next Term in Winchester.

Winchester, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—An order handed down in Corporation Court today postpones until the next term the question of whether Max Krol, former local textile manufacturer sentenced to serve six years in the penitentiary on a charge of embezzling $4,412.32 from the Arthur G. Jones Woolen Corporation, shall forfeit cash bond in the amount of $5,000.

The motion to continue the case was unopposed by the State when counsel for Krol appeared and declared the defendant, who is in Chicago, is still too ill to appear in the local court. Another motion that the trial of three other indictments each charging Krol with alleged irregularities in connection with the funds of the woolen mill, be continued, was also unopposed.

Krol, refused a write of error by the Supreme Court June 19, was to have appeared in corporation court that day by the terms of his bond. The case has been continued from time to time because of what has been described as the "desperate illness" of the defendant.

Krol was treasurer and general selling agent of the Jones Corporation.

Girl at Randolph-Macon Who Shot Herself Tells of 'Troubles.'

Police, Head of College Accept Explanation of Affair.

Lynchburg, Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—Dr. Theodore Jack, president of Randolph-Macon College, said today that 18-year-old Joy Koy, sophomore at the college, who was found last night with two bullet wounds near her heart, had been "distressed in mind because of personal problems" for several days.

With the finding of the pistol both the president and police officials investigating the case accepted the girl's statement she had fired the bullets into her side because of "trouble, trouble."

The girl, of remarkable physique, apparently had walked several hundred yards after firing the two bullets into her body. The pistol was found this morning 467 yards from the curbstone on which the injured woman sat when a park caretaker found her, moaning, last night.

At the hospital the girl said she had fired the shots. "Why?" she was asked.

"Trouble, trouble." A physician, insisting the woman's condition was too critical to permit police questioning, halted the quizzing. Police who went to the hospital today to continue the questioning were refused permission to see the girl.

Dr. Jack said he had been told the girl had been morose several days and had stayed in her room most of the time, declining to come to meals. He said he knew she did not come to dinner last night.

Asked what the "personal problems" were that worried the girl, Dr. Jack said he did not know.

He did say he learned the girl obtained the pistol at the college, but would not say from whom.

Meanwhile the injured girl, rallying after receiving medical treatment, was said by physicians to have a good chance to recover. Her mother, Mrs. Helen Koy, was said to be hurrying from St. Louis to her daughter's bedside.

Film Makers Approach Production Peak as Picture-Making Booms in Hollywood

Warners Near Capacity With Eight in Work

Over 5,000 on Studio Rolls Five Stage Shows Today; About the Showshops.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

Instead of the calamitous consequences so fearfully forecast by the motion-picture industry a scant eight months ago, last summer's Nation-wide drive for a higher ethical and moral standard in screen entertainment has resulted in a greater number of superior pictures than have ever been available at any time in the history of the cinema.

This is a happy circumstance that has started the celluloid industry on its way toward all-time peak production records. More and better pictures are being made than ever before, more people are being employed and boom days have returned to the capital of filmdom.

With the largest and most important schedule of pictures in the company's experience ahead of them, officials at the Warner Brothers-First National studios, for example, are rapidly stepping up their Hollywood plants toward capacity production.

Eight feature pictures are now before the camera and, according to Jack L. Warner, vice president in charge of production, this extensive shooting program is affording employment to the greatest number of people ever on the company's salary rolls, more than 5,000 persons being kept busy on the Warner lot alone.

Shakespeare in Celluloid.

The largest and most important production on this list and one of the most important ever filmed in Hollywood, of course, is the elaborate screen version of Shakepeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which Max Reinhardt, world-famous wizard of stagecraft, is producing as his first motion picture. A majority of the stars on the Warner roster are engaged in the making of this monumental work.

"Go Into Your Dance," which co-stars Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler in the first picture in which they ever have appeared together, is another big-scale production that is occupying the time of a vast army of players, technicians, artisans and extras.

The film play "In Caliente," in which Lloyd Bacon is directing Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien, Leo Carillo and a considerable additional supporting cast, is one-quarter of the way through its shooting schedule.

"The Goose and the Gander," starring Kay Francis, supported by George Brent, Genevieve Tobin, Ralph Forbes and others, is another important subject now before the cameras. It is Miss Francis' second since her return from Europe, the first, "Living on Velvet," not yet having been released for public exhibition.

Guy Kibbee and Aline MacMahon are costarring again in "Wanderlust" and Ben Hecht has an original screen play in work under the title of "The Florentine Dagger," in which Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods, C. Aubrey Smith and other popular players will be seen. This is a mystery story, as you probably already have guessed.

Big Musical Coming.

Two more that will engage attention when they are completed are "King of the Ritz," with William Gargan, Patricia Ellis, Allen Jenkins and several others, and "Gold Diggers of 1935," one of the Warners' most ambitious undertakings in the way of musical films, with Dick Powell, Adolphe Menjou, Gloria Stuart, Alice Brady, Glenda Farrell, Frank McHugh, Hugh Herbert, Joseph Cawthorn, Grant Mitchell, Dorothy Dare. Winifred Shaw and goodness only knows how many others in important assignments.

The latest picture to go into production is "Traveling Saleslady," in which Joan Blondell returns to the screen after an absence of many months.

With these and many other pictures being made ready for early production, the present capacity load at the Warner is expected to continue through the spring months and into early summer. A total of 68 feature pictures will be filmed and released this year by the combined Warner Brothers-First National-Cosmopolitan studios.

With comparable activity in most of the other major studios on the West Coast, last summer's bugaboo seems to have vanished into thin air. With all the hullabaloo that was raised about it, perhaps it were better said that it seems to have vanished into hot air!

And all that Warner Brothers business reminds me. Readers of The Post who begin the new serial, "Shadows in Paradise," next Sunday, will recognize Maxine Doyle, former mistress of ceremonies at the Earle Theater in this city, where she made the National Capital "tha-a-ank you" conscious, in the story's photographic illustrations. The story, which describes the trials and tribulations of a girl who tries to crash the gates of Hollywood, is fiction, but the pictures illustrating it are posed from life. The ebullient Miss Doyle, a perfect photographic subject who has been going places in pictures since she left Washington a year ago last September, was selected to pose in the role of Helen Burns, the heroine of the story. The photographs were taken in the Warner Brothers-First National studios on the Coast. They ought to illustrate "Shadows in Paradise" perfectly, for Maxine didn't have such a soft time getting started herself.

The Postman Rings Once.

The following, received in yesterday's mail—gratefully, to be candid about it—is self-explanatory:

"My dear Nelson Bell: Your very liberal use of notices regarding tryouts for parts in the new play, 'Field of Honor,' which the Pierce Hall Players will present next month, resulted in over 60 persons coming up to read. Consequently we were able to choose what we feel is a very fine cast.

"Mr. Frank Jameson will play the lead, an old German clockmaker, and Elinor Karsten, formerly of the Washington Square Players and the Civic Theater in Indianapolis, will have an important role. Also in the cast will be a number of the '44 Below' group, including Helen Shields, George Farrington, Paul Alexander and John Sikken.

"The author, Mrs. James Souby, of Omaha, Nebr., who came on to look over the cast, is very pleased.

"Again thank you for your very real cooperation. Without it we could not have gotten in touch with the very fine new people that came to us. Very truly yours

(Signed) MABEL VAN DYKE."

Although Jack Benny and Mary Livingston will not be in Washington on Sunday, they will appear in five de luxe performances at the Earle Theater today and tomorrow to make up in part for the day's absence forced upon them by the requirements of their network broadcast. Today's first stage show will begin at 11:25 a. m. The complete schedule of both stage performances and screenings of the feature picture will be found as usual in the Film Time Tables on this page.

"Local Boy Makes Good."

So far as the Capital is concerned, there will be two stars in "The Prince's Secret," a mystery-drama especially written for juvenile audiences, which comes to the National Theater Saturday morning as the season's fourth play by the Children's Theater of New York.

Mabel Taliaferro, famous actress, whose name is known to all lovers of the living theater, has the leading feminine role of Princess Isobel, fiancee of the Prince, whose disappearance from his castle on the day she arrives to visit him forms the major theme of the play.

Opposite Miss Taliaferro in the role of Prince Ramon, is Howard Whitfield. Mr. Whitfield is a Washingtonian, a graduate of Johnson Grade School, Powell Junior High School and Central High. Despite his youth, he has had several years' practical stage experience. He was a pupil of Lisa Gardiner, a member of Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran's National Theater Players and organizer of the Bartfield Players, a local amateur group. His performance in the Sylvan Theater last summer, as Puck in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," was a memorable achievement.

Washington's loss, to coin a phrase that sounds as if it might become a permanent part of the language, is the Children's Theater's gain.

Dramatic pictures of the returning of the verdict in the Bruno Richard Hauptmann case at Flemington, N. J., when the prisoner was found guilty of first degree murder, and stirring scenes relating to the crash of the U. S. dirigible Macon will be presented on the screen at both the Earle and Metropolitan Theaters today. Paramount is sending through these unusual shots as a special addition to the regular clips comprising the week-end release of Paramount Sound News. With the verdict in, pictures of the Hauptmann trial, of course, have ceased to be a matter of controversy between the State and the newsreel cameramen and their bosses.

Dots and Dashes.

The Sizzlers will broadcast from WRC today, 3:30 to 3:45; Monday, 4:30 to 4:45, and Wednesday, 9:45 to 10 . . . The boy forgot to say whether that Wednesday business is A. M., or P. M. . . . Frederick Man Is Held On Mann Act Charges

Frederick, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.). That the Virginia State police are holding Lawrence Duncan, of this city, on a charge of violating the Mann act was made known in a telegram received by Chief of Police Allen Bartgis from Officer F. C. Perkins, jr., of Pulaski, Va. The Virginia police are also holding Mrs. Jerome Hoffman, this city, for questioning in connection with the charge.

A copy of Duncan's criminal record, which dates back to 1927, was furnished by Chief Bartgis to the Virginia authorities. There is no record on Mrs. Hoffman, who until about two years ago, resided with her husband here. It is charged she recently left her home, taking about $900 with her.

Model Manikins Mustn't Muss!

Jane Hamilton and Virginia Reid, reading in the usual direction, fashion models in the film version of Jerome Kern's musical comedy, "Roberta," enjoy a little relaxation on the set. To guard against gown wrinkles, and because some of the style creations are so form-fitting as to preclude the luxury of sitting down, the studio has supplied these convenient standing recliners. Irene Dunne, Ginger Rogers and Fred Astaire are the stars of the picture, soon to be seen in Washington.

'Social Security' Is and Has Been Objective of State Department of Labor and Industry, Commissioner Hall Says.

(This is the first of a series dealing with the State Department of Labor and Industry.)

By Warren A. McNeill
(Associated Press Staff Writer).

Richmond, Va., Feb. 15.—"Social security," much discussed recently, is and has been the objective of the State department of labor and industry, says John Hopkins Hall, commissioner.

The department's idea of social security, Mr. Hall said, might be summed up in the phrases: Safety in employment, sanitation in employment and security in employment.

More formally stated in the Virginia statute creating the department, its duties are "to collect, assort, systematize, and present in annual reports to the Governor, to be by him biennially transmitted to the General Assembly, statistical details relating to all departments of labor, penal institutions and industrial pursuits in the State, especially in their relation to the commercial, industrial, social, educational and sanitary conditions of the laboring classes and to the permanent prosperity of the productive industries of the State."

Established in 1898.

Established in 1898, the Virginia department is one of the oldest of such departments in the Nation, but its broader functions have grown out of what originally was merely a bureau for collecting labor and industrial statistics.

Beginning with only the commissioner and a secretary, the bureau added its first field inspector in 1906. In 1912 its division of mines was created, in 1922 the women's and children's division was added, in 1924 the State employment service, and in 1927 the extra session of the General Assembly reorganized the entire department, along with other branches of the State government. The material addition came in 1930 when a statistician was added to do more efficiently the work for which the department originally was created.

Fundamentals of Work.

Fundamentals of the work still are regarded by Mr. Hall as assuring safety and health to employed persons and making the conditions under which they are employed satisfying.

"That is," he said, "we try to see that a man gets a job, is protected in it and will be satisfied with it."

(Individual functions of the department are described in more detail in the next article of this series to be published by The Post on Tuesday.)

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Concert by the Philadelphia Orchestra, Otto Klemperer, conductor, in Constitution Hall. Program: Overture to "Anacreon" (Cherubini), Suite from "Pulcinella" (Stravinski), Symphony No. 3 (Beethoven).

Had the Auditorium been crowded on this occasion, the tribute of mere attendance would have been more commensurate with the admiration aroused by the magisterial conducting of Otto Klemperer and the enkindled responsiveness of the men who fulfilled his behests. As it was, the auditors present compensated to the best of their ability for the absent by a warmth of welcome and a mounting enthusiasm which resulted in many recalls for the conductor.

It was evident immediately in the Cherubini overture that Mr. Klemperer's intelligence seizes upon every significant phrase in the music which he chooses for performance. One imagines that he is incapable of a perfunctory reading, not only because of his temperamental incisiveness, but also because he would not consider any score worth playing which does not contain potentialities for illuminating interpretation. Listening to his disclosure of Cherubini's idiom, one realized that one was hearing new meanings and unexpected charms.

What he did for Cherubini was but the preparation for his brilliant handling of the reduced orchestra in Stravinski's clever garnishing of themes borrowed from Pergolesi. His skill in bringing out the instrumental color and preserving perfect clarity in every tint, in underlining the harmonic wit as well as the humor of the scoring, in vitalizing every rhythmic accent, was a tour de force of conducting.

Much of the material for the "Pulcinella" ballet Stravinski took from Pergolesi's trio sonatas, retaining the physiognomy of the music while subtly altering its expression. Deftly simulating some procedures of early eighteenth century style by scoring a quintet of solo strings against a string choir and a few woodwinds and brass, he modernized the themes, and transformed what was originally pure music into a programmatic version.

It would seem as though Stravinski had discovered in Pergolesi's innocent sonatas latent buffoonery, and had taken a mischievous delight in calling it to our attention. The devices he used include the stressing of cadences in amusing accents, the vulgarizing of melodies, the quickening of tempi and the emphasizing of angularity. The cleverness of the scoring is nowhere more striking than in the effects of percussion produced without a single tympanum or drum.

Sparkling as he made Cherubini and Stravinski sound, Mr. Klemperer's great moments came in his tremendously vital reading of the "Eroica" symphony. It has been a long time since one has heard so stirring and so eloquent a performance of this work. Perhaps the most remarkable part of the performance was the absolute clarity with which the music was set forth, the absence of the slightest obscurity in phrase. Each inner voice in the harmonic whole sounded with its intended value, and one heard many a passage illuminated by a fresh light.

Prisoner Released; His Alleged Offense Antedated the Law

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 15 (AP).—James Macantire, of Boonsboro, has been released from the house of correction on a habeas corpus writ because he was sentenced there under a law which did not become effective until five months after the alleged act was committed.

The writ was signed Wednesday by Judge Frank G. Wagaman, in circuit court, in terminating the one-year sentence imposed by Magistrate Walter E. Shifler at Boonsboro on August 2, 1934.

The law under which the justice acted was approved by the General Assembly on December 16, 1933, giving magistrates jurisdiction in disposing of larceenies in which the amount of the goods or money stolen did not exceed $25.

Attorneys for Macantire in the petition for a writ of habeas corpus brought out that the alleged commission of the crime took place on July 26, 1933, nearly five months before the approval of the law by the Legislature.

Macantire had been charged with the theft of gasoline of a total value of $1 from the State roads commission. He was not arrested and arraigned until last August.

Inquiry on Relief In Counties Urged

Rep. Moomaw Calls On State Legislature to Act.

Waynesboro, Pa., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—Although not ready at this time to announce any direct accusations on relief activities, Representative Paul C. Moomaw, of Waynesboro, said he will press for immediate investigation of relief in Adams, Fulton, Franklin and Cumberland Counties.

A resolution was introduced by Representative Moomaw in the State Legislature asking appointment of a committee of three to probe "the conduct and operation of the emergency relief boards operating in this district, and operating in conjunction with local governmental, State and local agencies in the district, dating back to the inception of the activities of the State Emergency Relief Board, in the Chambersburg district."

His resolution, he said, was prompted by numerous complaints, including "use of relief funds and offers of employment for political purposes, discrimination in the selection of employes, payment of excessive salaries in administrative positions, employment of two or more persons in one family while refusing employment to persons in dire need of same, and failure to pay moneys due for wages."

Appeal Prepared For Maj. Kent

Botetourt Prosecutor to Resist Writ of Error.

Fincastle, Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—Philip Kohen, Commonwealth's Attorney, of Botetourt County, has been notified formally by counsel for Maj. Robert C. Kent, now in Richmond Penitentiary under sentence of 13 years on a charge of kidnaping Mrs. Mary J. Hastings, that a petition is being made to the Supreme Court of Appeals for a writ of error.

The local prosecutor is preparing to oppose the petition.

The body of Mrs. Hastings was found beside a Pennsylvania highway a few days after she left Blue Ridge with Kent. She had been shot through the head. Kent contended he left the woman in Washington as he continued to New York.

U. S. Detainer Filed To Hold Misunas

Seeks Custody if Virginia Frees Him Before 1950.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—The Federal Government today filed a detainer against Arthur "Dutch" Misunas, confessed accomplice of the recently electrocuted gangsters, Robert Mais and Walter Legenza.

The detainer asked that if Misunas, who is serving a 35-year term for his part in the crime, is released at any time before the expiration of 15 years, he be turned over to the Federal Government.

Misunas recently was sentenced in Washington to a term, to run concurrently with the one in Virginia, of from 3 to 15 years for his part in the Union Station robbery of December 5, 1933.

Broadway —Goes to Miami

By Ed Sullivan

Hither and Yawn!

Miami Beach, Feb. 15.—This winter resort should ape the Pullman cars that feature conspicuous signs, "Don't play cards with strangers." There are plenty of cheats and sharpers of the sands here, but their sharpshooting tactics are applied to backgammon. I watched one of them in action yesterday. Casually, he attached himself to a group of prominent Broadwayites to give onlookers the impression that he was one of the party of big shots. Half an hour later he had spotted a chump and was playing backgammon with him. The chump won the first afternoon's play. Today the sharpshooter will be pained to learn that the money he deliberately lost, as a come-on, is gone forever. Some of us warned the chump and he won't play again.

Frank Keeney, veteran theater-chain owner and race track celeb, is probably the best-known of all the thousands here. Keeney has the figure and energy of a lad in his twenties. He attributes his health to his "Blue Book," the most unusual document I've ever seen. This is a book of "Do's and Don'ts" related to food, and with it are recipes for every conceivable dish. Jockeys, when they have to take off weight, go to Keeney for dietary advice and so do the show girls of Broadway. They call up and ask him if this food or that food is listed in the book. If he tells 'em no, they eat it anyway.

A group of Broadwayites were marveling at appointments and modern improvements of one of the local dog tracks. "There's still room for improvement," cracked Jerry Brady, "the greyhounds should walk upstairs and bring the money directly to your box."

The Miami and Miami Beach Chamber of Commerce, it seems to me, have missed one of the best bets available. The State of Florida, by advancing the clocks to daylight saving time, during the winter months, would achieve a master stroke as it would give the tourists an extra hour of this precious sunlight. If they accept my suggestion, I want 10 per cent of the hour hand on every local timepiece.

Dr. Campbell Named As County Health Aid

Leonardtown, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.). Dr. Donald St. Clair Campbell, deputy health officer of St. Marys County, has been appointed also as deputy health officer of Charles County to fill the place of Dr. John Cunningham, who has resigned to accept a post in Connecticut.

The appointment of Dr. Campbell was made by Dr. R. H. Riley, who has charge of health work for the State. Dr. Campbell in turn will appoint an assistant to help him carry on the work for both Charles and St. Marys counties.

Martin Frass Death Is Held Accidental

A verdict of accidental death was returned by a coroner's jury yesterday in the death of Martin A. Frass, of Hyattsville, Md., Washington's eighth traffic victim since January 1.

Frass was killed when an automobile in which he was a passenger crashed into a pole on Riggs road northeast, February 1. The jury's verdict exonerated Richard Seek, also of Hyattsville, driver of the car.

Rat and Cat Call Halt on Warfare, Sleep Side by Side

Cambridge, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—The lion and the lamb may lie down together as a circus stunt, but when the cat and the rat do a similar stunt, it looks like the advent of peace in the animal kingdom.

Wallace Merrick, local grocer, was surprised recently upon arrival at his store on a very cold morning to find a large cat, which he keeps for the purpose of ridding the place of rodents, asleep with a rat in front of the stove.

Lindsay Must Face Virginia Grand Jury

Richmond, Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—David H. Lindsay, 34, former Commonwealth's attorney of Gloucester County, was ordered held for the grand jury on an involuntary manslaughter warrant after a prolonged police court hearing today.

Lindsay was arrested on February 5, the day after Herbert B. McAllister was killed and two girls were injured seriously by a speeding automobile which rushed through a safety zone at Broad and Robertson streets and failed to stop. At the time of his arrest, he denied the crime. The defense offered no evidence today.

Sneezing Siege Ended for Woman After Five Weeks

Baltimore, Feb. 15 (AP).—A siege of sneezing which gripped Mrs. Edgar Harmon, of Orrtanna, Pa., for more than five weeks, interfered with her sleep and caused her to lose 20 pounds in weight was said by her physicians here today to have been broken.

Mrs. Harmon, said to have been sneezing almost continuously since January 5, came to the Johns Hopkins Hospital for treatment. The physicians reported that the sneezing stopped almost as suddenly as it began, but that corrective treatment was being continued at the hospital.

Efforts were being made to determine the cause of the strange attack.

Maryland and Virginia Boxers on Edge for Dual Meet Tonight

Record Total Beats D. C. Bowlers

Connecticut Team Rolls 3307 for World Mark at Willimantic.

Litchfield, Occidentals, Has 718 Set; Clarke Loses in Singles.

WILLIAMANTIC, Conn., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—Shooting a world record five-game score of 3,307, the Connecticut Blue Ribbons defeated the Washington Occidental team here tonight in the most sensational duckpin match ever witnessed in New England. The margin of victory was only 50 pins, for the Occidentals themselves turned in some remarkable scores by rolling 3,257.

The Blue Ribbons, in establishing the new mark cracked the Occidental's own world record by two pins. The former mark was 3,305, rolled by the Capital aggregation at Hartford last February against the Morgain five.

Litchfield Totals 718.

The match was featured by Whip Litchfield's 718 which held the Washington team in the running throughout the gruelling battle. Time after time he had the capacity crowd gripping their seats as he hammered the pins for double-header strikes and heavy spare counts. He rolled 450 for his first three strings.

With a world record five-game score looming after his fourth game when he rolled 148 to total 598, Litchfield could roll only 120. Apparently pressing, he missed three single-pin breaks which is the story back of the team's loss. The entire team missed enough single pinners to eclipse even the blue-ribbon record total.

Jack White, with 701, supplied the vital wallops that put the Connecticut crew over the top.

White Wins Singles.

Jack White, United States sweepstakes champion, continued his brilliant streak of rolling by pounding out 696 in the singles to defeat Astor Clarke, former titleholder, who pulled up with 647.

The Occidentals charged to the front in the opening game, rolling 883 to 677. They nosed the Blue Ribbons out in the second game by one stick, 658 to 657. It was three straight wins for the Washington team when they finished with 649 to 640 in third skirmish. But in the fourth game the District crew lost the lead when the Nutmeggers ran up a score of 665 to 624. From there out the winners were never headed off.

Aldie Boys and Girls Basket Ball Victors

Marshall, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—The Aldie boys' and girls' basket ball teams took both ends of a double-header with Marshall tonight in Northern Virginia League games.

With Gibson and Fletcher showing the way, the Aldie boys eked out a 16-to-11 decision over Marshall in a game featured by close guarding. The eventual winners spurted near the end to clinch the victory.

Pearson and Warren starred for the Aldie girls, while E. Ball and Murphy were outstanding for Marshall.

Judson Returns To Wrestle Wars

Fearless Frank Tackles Garibaldi Here.

Judson is back.

Not since Kid Caesar telegraphed "Veni, vidi, vici" to the home office has a bulletin created such a furore.

It seems that Fearless Frank Judson, the old wrist-locksmith, will again be in our midst Thursday night at the Auditorium to grapple a bit with growling Gino Garibaldi. This marks Judson's first local appearance in more than two years.

Fearless Frank, who was a veritable sensation when he worked here before, has just completed a triumphant tour of Australia.

Virginia Five Wins 31-29 Thriller

Generals Beaten After Holding Early Lead; Smith Is Star.

UNIVERSITY, Va., Feb. 15.—Playing a remarkable defensive game in the second half, Virginia's quintet held Washington and Lee to two field goals while registering 19 points, which proved enough to defeat the Generals, 31 to 29, and even the count for the season with Lexington men.

"Cy" Young's wards clearly outplayed the Cavaliers for the greater part of the first half, and at one time enjoyed a 7-point lead. Goals by Smith and Male served to cut down this lead, the half-time count standing 16 to 12 in favor of the Generals.

Count Is Knotted.

Quick shots by Abbitt and Capt. Sturm soon after the intermission knotted the count, and from that point on the Cavaliers were never never headed, due to the sharp-shooting of Ray Smith, who garnered five goals in the period.

Twice Virginia had a 6-point margin, but this was reduced by some accurate shooting from the foul line by Iler and Pette.

Norman Iler, a fast-moving guard, starred for the Generals, collecting 14 points. Close on his heels was Charlie Smith, Virginia guard, with 13 points.

So exciting was the finish that the crowd was on its feet when the whistle sounded.

Shore, brilliant running guard of the little Hoyas, led the scoring with 13 points, while Bashin at forward accounted for 9 points. Jacobs led the young Spiders with 8.

Yanks' Drop Below 4th Looming

Only Chapman Is Sure of Berth in Wobbly Outfield.

Club Tries to Fill Gaps, But Rival Owners Ask Too Much.

(Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.)

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—The $5,000,000 New York Yankee Club, representing baseball's largest investment and possessing the game's second most extensive farm system, tonight faced the possibility of sinking into the second division this year for the first time in a decade, because of its uncertain outfield.

At the fade-out of Babe Ruth's picket regime, the Yanks' "sunken garden" provides the diamond's biggest question mark. It thrusts such an acute problem before Yankee officials that they are shunting all other irritants into the background—matters such as Ruth's future, salary difficulties with Lou Gehrig and Lefty Gomez, etc.

It was learned tonight that Yankee brass hats have virtually despaired of getting outfield talent from any other American League Club. They have been negotiating for weeks with three clubs, trying to buy or obtain by trade one or possibly two picket men. But these negotiations failed.

Demands Too High.

It appears that other owners, aware of the Yanks' plight, demand Yankee Stadium—with Col. Jacob Ruppert's brewery thrown in—for a classy fly hawk. Hence, unless some miraculous deal pops up between now and March 11, the Yanks still start training at St. Petersburg with their own uncertain picketeers.

Concerning this outfield material, baseball observers are generally agreed that only one man, Bullet Bene Chapman, of Birmingham, is certain to perform in big league style.

True, the Yanks have six others on their roster, but their ability and condition are as uncertain as Peggy Joyce's next matrimonial jump. Earle Combs suffered a 4-inch crack in his cranium last summer when he crashed into a concrete wall during a game at St. Louis. Today Combs asked permission to go to St. Petersburg with the batterymen on March 4, to get an early start in training. His letter said he is in good shape. Just how running, jumping and sliding will affect that noodle is extremely problematical.

O. K., Walker Says.

Then there is Dixie Walker, who was on the bench virtually all of last season because of the recurrence of an arm injury. Dixie claims his wing is in fine shape, but all players say that at contract-signing time. And George Selkirk, who is being counted upon as a regular, performed well at bat last season but left considerable doubt as to his fielding genius. Jesse Hill and Myril Hoag are extremely uncertain, and as far as Babe Ruth is concerned, the Yanks are leaving him out of their calculations.

If this outfield flops, the Yanks unquestionably will have extreme difficulty remaining in the league's upper division, where Detroit, Boston, Cleveland and probably Washington will be out for blood.

Dutra and Laffoon Tie for Golf Lead

Score 69 Each in Arizona; Zimmerman Follows.

Phoenix, Ariz., Feb. 15 (AP).—Mortie Dutra, of Chandler, Ariz., and Ky Laffoon, of Denver, were tied for the lead in the $2,500 Phoenix Open Golf Tournament at the end of the first 18-hole round today. Each scored 69, two under par.

Al Zimmerman, of Portland, Oreg., was in third place with 70, one under par.

Immediately behind Zimmerman, in even par 71, came Craig Wood, of Deal, N. J.

Three others, Bunny Torpey, of Kansas City; Henry Picard, of Hershey, Pa., and Horton Smith, were tied at 72, while nearly a dozen were grouped at 73.

Turf Stars Vie For $26,000 On Coast

Race Today Due to Decide Derby Future Choice; 21 Are Named.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 15 (AP).—Twenty - one thoroughbreds were listed today as overnight entries for the Santa Anita Derby, which tomorrow may decide what 3-year-old will become the future book favorite for the annual Kentucky Derby in May.

It was considered likely that the winner tomorrow in the $20,000 added event would be among those named for the Kentucky classic.

Of today's entries, approximately a dozen were expected at the post tomorrow for the mile and a sixteenth race, with the Catawba Stable entry of Sound Advice and Polar Flight the favorite.

Until final declarations are made tomorrow and the post positions are drawn, the exact value of the race will not be ascertained. Fifty-four nominations added $2,700 to the purse and an additional $250 will be asked from those going to the post. The total money is expected to be in the neighborhood of $26,000.

Of this, $4,000 goes to the second-place horse, $2,000 to third and $1,000 to fourth, with the winner getting the remainder.

While Mrs. James Austin's entry of Sound Advice and Polar Flight found favor on the basis of past performances—each boasting two victories—it will be the first time any starter has gone more than a mile. The question of their ability to stand up still remains to be answered.

Peradventure, Greentree Stable filly, was one of the top choices to threaten. The filly, owned by Mrs. Payne Whitney, will have a weight advantage of five pounds plus the expert riding of Silvio Coucci,

Deans Are Rated By Gift of Gab

Winston-Salem, N. C., Feb. 15 (AP).—"General" Alvin Crowder, Detroit Tiger hurler, passed judgment today on the pitching Dean brothers.

"Dizzy," said the general at a luncheon club, "talks a lot—and is as good as he talks.

"Paul doesn't talk so much—and is as good as he talks."

Evans Drives Diesel Car 125 M.P.H.

Daytona Course Is Still Unfit for Bluebird; Car in Garage.

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., Feb. 15 (AP).—Dave Evans, Indianapolis race driver, set a new world record for Diesel-motored cars today, averaging 125.069 miles an hour for two runs through the measured mile of the course where Sir Malcolm Campbell hopes to lift the automobile speed record to 300 miles an hour.

The fromer record was set at 120.33 in June last year at Mont Lhery, France, by Capt. George Eyston, of England, in a car of British manufacture.

Under perfect weather conditions, although the beach still was too rough for Campbell to try a test run today, Evans went through the mile on the south run at 119.08, and came back with a brisk breeze behind him at a 130.813 clip. The average of the times for the two miles gave him the new record of 125.065.

Evans Disappointed.

Evans, who had expected to exceed 140 miles an hour, expressed great disappointment at the low speed he set in achieving the new record and announced he would attempt to break the new record next week.

"A cap dropped out of the bottom of my radiator just as I was entering the first measured mile," Evans explained. "I was forced to lift my foot from the accelerator and practically coasted through the mile. I think with the proper repairs I can do better than 140. I will try to do 145 Sunday, and if I don't succeed in breaking 140, I'll try again Monday."

Because of a full moon which affects the tides, Monday is expected to be the perfect day for speed runs. Tomorrow, Wild Bill Cummings, winner of the 1934 Indianapolis race and national automobile racing champion, will challenge the record with another

Cunningham Favored in Mile Run

Bonthron and Venzke to Face Old Rival at Garden Tonight.

NEW YORK, Feb. 15 (AP).—Glenn Cunningham, the "iron horse" of footracers, is the man to beat in the classic renewal of the Baxter mile tomorrow night. All forecasts favor the former University of Kansas runner in the feature event of the New York Athletic Club's sixty-eighth track and field meet, in which he will face his two perennial rivals, Bill Bonthron and Gene Venzke, as well as Erik Ny, of Sweden, and Harry Williamson, of the University of North Carolina.

Victor in four successive indoor races so far and having demonstrated superiority over Venzke and Bonthron two weeks ago by decisive margins, Cunningham figures to repeat and, if necessary, threaten his own indoor mile record of 4:08.4, made on the same track last winter.

Bonthron in Shape.

Bonthron, over-trained for his first indoor duel with Cunningham two weeks ago, should be in much better shape tomorrow night. Tiger Bill doesn't relish the recollection of that decisive licking, and he's anxious to turn the tables, just as he did outdoors last summer after being badly beaten at Princeton by Cunningham in world record time. Furthermore it was the Baxter mile that gave Bonthron his first triumph over Cunningham last year. The score is now all-square at three victories each for these renowned rivals.

The Garden is assured its second capacity crowd of the season for a track meet—16,000 fans.

Even the Greeks Subsidized Stars

New York, Feb. 15 (AP).—Subsidizing "amateur" athletics was just an old Greek custom even 2,500 years ago, Prof. Floyd A. Spencer, of New York University, asserted in an address tonight.

"A comparison between so-called over-emphasis in sports today and in the golden age of Pericles 2,500 years ago," he said, "furnishes eloquent proof that there is really 'nothing new under the sun.'

"Then as now star athletes were subsidized and outstanding citizens glowed in the reflected glory that resulted from their being popularly though unofficially identified as the patrons of sport."

C. U. Boxers Will Meet Terrors

Match Tonight Looms as One of Season's Ring Features Here.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

THE militant young mitten-pushers representing Catholic University entertain Western Maryland at 8 o'clock tonight at Brookland—if you consider a punch on the schnozzola entertainment—and the match shapes up as one of the season's outstanding attractions.

Western Maryland's ace light-heavyweight, Bernie Kaplan, was read out of the Terror line-up yesterday because of an injury suffered in training, but with Ernie Ortennsi available in his stead, the invaders' chances of winning do not appear to be seriously affected.

Kaplan reputedly is just a shade better than his substitute and possesses not a whit more of confidence. Ortennsi carries a paralyzing punch in both gloves and intends to use it in snapping Fleming's string of knockout victories.

Is Bent on K. O.

Fleming, who is the shining light of the Cardinal team and is its most colorful performer, is bent on winning all of his bouts this season by knockouts. He wants a K. O. certificate with his A. B. degree in June.

Capt. Ed Thibideau, Angy Restaino and Tom Oliver help Fleming carry C. U.'s victory hopes tonight. Restaino and Oliver are undefeated, while Thibideau's lone defeat was a close decision to Jack Kneipp, of Duke. The defeat of any one of this quartet will seriously impair Catholic's chances.

Coach Eddie LaFond last night announced a brand-new heavyweight for C. U. in George Orth, whose hair is redder than Fleming's, though his punch is not as stiff. Orth's only appearance in the ring last season was in the intermurals at the University of Maryland, where he lost the nod to Joe Meglen, of Georgetown.

Brinkman vs. Gorski.

Max Brinkman, the stolid Teuton listed as Catholic's 165-pounder, has a man-sized task on his hands in Andy Gorski, ruler in the intercollegiate middleweights. Gorski is one of the four undefeated men on the Western Maryland team, and on past performances looms as the victor.

Tom Pontecarvo, Western Maryland's heavyweight; Don Keyser, 155-pounder, and Ed Bennett, 115-pounder, are the other undefeated campaigners on the Terror roster. It is this veteran array of tested glovemen that the Cardinals must batter through to establish themselves as one of the East's leading exponents of the manly art.

Western Maryland last week lost a 4½-to-3½ decision to Syracuse, but with two substitutes in the line-up. A repetition of such a performance tonight will result in a few marred faces and another blemish on the Brooklanders' escutheon. The Terrors reign a 5-to-3 favorite.

The line-ups:

Catholic U.	Wgt.	Western Md.
Miro	115	Bennett
Restaino	125	Rusterberg
Thibodeau	135	Myers
La Salle	145	Keyser
Oliver	155	Kaddy
Brinkman	165	Gorski
Fleming	Heavyweight	Ortenzni
Orth		Pontecarvo

Referee—Charley Reynolds.

Even Chance Is Seen for Terps

Old Liners' Change in Line-up Boosts Hope for Victory.

By Bill McCormick.

A DETERMINED group of gentlemen from the Free State and an equally determined group of gentlemen from the Old Dominion will cast aside traditional politeness tonight to give free reign to white-hot fighting blood as Maryland engages Virginia in a significant dual boxing meet at Charlottesville.

The Old Liners will take to Charlottesville the strongest group of fighters that has faced the Southern Conference champions this year. With a readjusted line-up that Coach Jack Harmony has devised, many are conceding the Maryland mitten propellers an even chance of tieing or defeating the Cavaliers.

Jimmy Young and Bill Waller, Maryland's two lightest fist flingers, will draw the most difficult assignments of any of the Old Liners. Young will be called upon to face Archie Hahn, conference 115-pound champion who, although he faltered badly in his last few fights, still is good enough to trounce most college boxers his weight.

Rainey Improved.

Waller will face an even more difficult foe in the person of Gordon Rainey, another conference champion, who not only is holding to the high standard of fighting that won him his title, but has shown great improvement this season.

Maryland's hopes rest easily on Ivan Nedomatsky, their 135-pound punch pusher, who will face Marion Brooks. Nedomatsky has few, if any, equals in the collegiate ranks. He has won every fight this year via the knockout route and many are looking for him to continue his string of brief bouts at the expense of Brooks. The Virginia lad, who is new to the varsity this season, is just beginning to find himself, but may develop into a boxer of great ability.

Walter Webb, Maryland's 145-pound representative, will draw another difficult assignment when he faces Maynard Womer, who also is a conference champion. Webb boxes nicely, but Womer holds a distinct advantage in speed, aggressiveness and punch which should return him a winner over the Terrapin. Womer must fight his best fight, however, to protect the Cavaliers' interests in this division.

Lyman McAboy, who has been holding down the 165-pound berth for Maryland all season, has definitely been assigned to the 155-pound division for the Virginia meet. His both with Southpaw Bill McClung should prove one of the highlights of the contest, with honors about evenly divided on paper in advance.

Neither fighter is an orthodox fist flinger, which has added greatly to the preflight speculation concerning the bout. McAboy clowns continually, a la Battling Bozo, dropping his arms and swinging wallops from all directions. McClung shoots his right with great accuracy and very telling effect for a left-hander—and there you have it.

Stewart McCaw, Maryland's conference light-heavyweight champion, will be squeezed down to the middleweight division for the Virginia meet. His opponent will be Mortimer Caplin, a good boxer and fair puncher, who possesses enough ability to defeat most 165-pounders, but probably not McCaw.

Faces Gormley's Hook.

Johnny Gormley, an inexperienced fighter, will occupy the 175-pound berth for Maryland against John Noll. Noll, who has natural attributes that may make him a good boxer, has not yet found himself and may fall a victim to Gormley's sizzling left hook.

Freddy Cramer, the best or second-best heavyweight in the conference, will be called upon to repulse Al Farrel, of Maryland, in the bout that may prove the decisive encounter of the meet. Farrell has been absent from the ring all season because of scholastic difficulties, but is in good condition by virtue of stiff daily workouts for the last two weeks.

Post Predictions.

115-pound class—Jimmy Young (Maryland) vs. Archie Hahn. Hahn by decision.

125-pound class—Bill Waller (Maryland) vs. Gordon Rainey. Rainey by decision.

135-pound class—Ivan Nedomatsky (Maryland) vs. Marion Brooks. Nedomatsky by a knockout.

145-pound class—Walter Webb (Maryland) vs. Maynard Womer. Womer by decision.

155-pound class—Lyman McAboy (Maryland) vs. Bill McClung. Draw.

165-pound class—Stewart McCaw (Maryland) vs. Mortimer Caplin. McCaw by decision.

175-pound class—Bill Gormley (Maryland) vs. John Noll. Gormley by knockout.

Heavyweight class—Al Farrell (Maryland) vs. Freddy Cramer. Cramer by decision.

Trainer Trotter Gets Suspension

Florida Bans Horseman in Stimulating Case.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 15 (AP).—C. H. ("Tobe") Trotter was suspended by the Florida State Racing Commission until April 2 following his appearance before the racing commission today. Trotter was the trainer of Postscript, which won at long odds here recently and was found, through the saliva test, to have been stimulated.

Trotter, who once demanded a saliva test of a horse he thought stimulated, blamed Postscript's condition on a discharged employe.

Cunningham Not a Show-Off As Pre-Race Trials Indicate

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—When we foregather in Madison Square Garden tomorrow night for the running of the Baxter mile at the New York Athletic Club games, it will seem, of course, as if I had never been away, indeed as if a year had not passed. For on the track below warming up, each in his own peculiar fashion, will be the same three heroes, Venzke and Bonthron and Cunningham. They are three exciting personalities and figures. There is Bonthron, who doesn't like to run; Cunningham, the greatest mile runner the world has ever known, who was once a cripple, his marvelous legs seared and roasted by fire, and Venzke, who once set a record for the indoor mile, and who in the last two or three years has been busy running third to Cunningham and Bonthron, and who is still in there trying to beat them. A gentleman who has the courage to go on trying to beat Cunningham in the mile, time after time, is something of a story.

Cunningham, of course, is my track hero. He looks every inch the champion that he is. And I always get a thrill out of the Weismullers and Cunninghams and Joneses, who were sickly kids . . . handicapped in youth, or who suffered some injury and who overcame those defects, handicaps that would make misanthropic failures and whimpers out of the average chap, to become champions of the world in a sport.

To me it is one of the greatest of all success stories. Certainly the last thing one would expect of a boy who had both legs burned in a schoolhouse fire would be to see him develop into a record miler. But Cunningham wanted to be a miler before his accident. He was always running as a kid. When the doctors told him that he would be lucky to retain the use of his legs for walking, much less running, he wanted to realize his ambition even more fiercely. Dear, dear, I'm about to moralize. But you never know what you can do until some one comes along and demonstrates what can be done. I'd like to pack Madison Square Garden with every crippled or handicapped kid in the world to watch Cunningham run.

I wonder how Cunningham's popularity is now. You know, the boys used to come to the track meets to see him beaten. Why? Well, people never bother much to go behind appearances. They felt that the big Kansan was a show-off because he would take the track at intervals anywhere from 45 minutes to an hour before his race was called and run up and down, trot, sprint,

Harris on WMAL.

Two months to a day before the opening of the baseball season, Bucky Harris, manager of the Nats, airs some of his thoughts and meditations concerning the Nats' outlook, tonight at 6:30 o'clock on Bill Coyle's WMAL Sports Parade. The former "boy manager" of the Washington Club will be introduced as "The Man Who Came Back." He is to talk on the rookie question among other things.

Medwick Sees Batting Crown For Self, Pennant for Cards

CARTERET, N. J., Feb. 15 (AP).—Joe ("Ducky-Wucky") Medwick, one of the better-known baseball holdouts, expects 1935 to be a good year for both himself and the St. Louis Cardinals, and "wouldn't be surprised" if he became the National League's champion batter.

"I should have a good season," the husky Cardinal outfielder said today. "I know more about the game than I did last year; I know more about the pitchers and the parks and I'm ready for a great year. As a matter of fact, I would not be surprised if I lend the league in hitting."

Considering Joe's 1934 record, such a feat isn't so hard to imagine. He finished the year—his first full season in the major leagues—with a healthy average of .320 and was one of the league's best in slugging.

Returns First Contract.

Young Medwick, incidentally, is anxious to trek toward the Southland, but he's going to wait here at home until he's satisfied with the figures behind the dollar sign in the contract offered him by St. Louis. He received one contract this week, but he air-mailed it back to Branch Rickey with a P. S. to the effect it wasn't satisfactory.

"It was about $2,500 short," Joe said, "of what I want to play ball this year. I shot it back and expect to hear from the boss again next week."

Medwick declined to say what the Cards did offer. It's not a secret, however, that he intended to ask for $10,000, which would mean contract No. 1 suggested that he take his place in left field for approximately $7,500.

Expects Good Race.

Getting back to the 1935 campaign, Medwick said he expected a "good race but, naturally, we're going to win." He said the other teams in the league would be "all tough this year and there's no kidding about that."

"But with Dizzy Dean and the same young club with which we finished the season last year back, the Cards ought to be way up front before the end of the year," Joe predicted. "It won't be like last year; I don't think there'll ever again be a finish like the one we put on to win the pennant and the world series in 1934."

Klein, English, of Cubs, Give Up Holdout Ghost

Chicago, Feb. 15 (AP).—Charles Herbert (Chuck) Klein and Elwood (Woody) English, who have been acting like holdouts, even though not classed as such by the club, came to terms with the Cubs today.

English signed his contract today. Klein, his $25,000 salary sliced, wired Owner Phil K. Wrigley from his home in Indianapolis that he would put his signed document in the mail tonight. English will again serve as field captain, which provides for a $100 a month bonus.

New York Torture Charges Stir District Dog Fanciers

By M. W. Meier.

NELSON ROBINS, New York sports writer, brought an avalanche of wrath down on his head from local dog fanciers because of his article on professional handlers which appeared in yesterday morning's sport section of The Washington Post.

"His information must have come from disgruntled exhibitors," vehemently declared J. C. O'Hare, president of the National Capitol Kennel Club, yesterday just before boarding a train for New York. "It is true that professional handlers are paid to handle dogs for absentee owners. It is also true, I am sorry to say, that now and then one finds a judge whose decisions are unfair.

"The American Kennel Club under whose auspices all championship shows are held, weeds out gentry of this sort in a hurry. They disbar them from ever again judging at an official show. They also disbar crooked handlers. At our own spring shows we select judges whose honesty and knowledge of various breeds is absolutely impeccable. Some of these men serve without pay. They render their service for the sheer love of the game.

"No dog ever enters our judging rings which hasn't been first thoroughly examined by a trio of competent veterinarians. A doped, diseased or tortured entry would be immediately disqualified. His owner and his handler would be so effectively posted that they would never again be welcome here or elsewhere.

"A dog to win in the National Capital Kennel Club show or any other licensed one must have merit and conform to the established standard. The man or woman with one dog or 30 stands as good a chance to win a ribbon or a trophy as the professional handler. But—his entries must possess quality.

"Our club will gladly pay a suitable reward to any person who proves that an entry in our forthcoming show has been doped, falsely handled according to showring ethics or tortured before entry in the ring."

Vigilance Taken.

Dr. Milton A. Bosley, who was chief veterinarian at the local club's last show, said, "I would instantly disqualify any diseased, doped,

Epaulet Triumphs by Half Length at Hialeah to Pay $38.50

Mock Turtle, Favorite, Is Second

Gelding Catches Filly in Stretch and Goes on to Score.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., Feb. 15 (AP).—Epaulet, a gelded son of the one-time speed marvel, Polydor, which William Sachsenmaier claimed out of his last race from William Ziegler, jr., for $2,500, made good at the first asking in his new silks here today. It was a shock to the talent, for the $38.50-for-$2 shot had been well beaten in his last two starts. Epaulet got up to subdue Marshall Fields' Mock Turtle, the short-priced favorite, by a half length in the featured Ocala Purse. R. Stone's Chief Mourner was more than a length farther back.

Of the ten 3-year-olds that accepted the issue, all but the winner, Vera Cruz and Fast Stride were named for the Florida Derby. Epaulet negotiated the 6 furlongs in 1:11 4-5.

Mock Turtle flattered her many backers and seemed a sure winner until straightened out in the stretch. The filly ran Phildia into defeat, then Bobby Merritt sent Epaulet after the favorite. The Sachsenmaier gelding drew up to Mock Turtle's throatlatch entering the final furlong and outfinished the filly. Chief Mourner had to work his way up from an indifferent beginning to be a good third.

Sparta Is Victorious.

Sparta, H. P. Headley's 2-year-old daughter of St. Germans, won her second purse in four starts and again demonstrated that she performs best with Earl Steffen in the saddle. The bay filly took the lead from ten other juveniles before reaching the half-way mark and held on to win by a head from Bright Light. The latter just failed to get up in time to give Jockey Johnny Gilbert another victory in a baby race. Squawker was third, two lengths behind. The winner was lightly regarded, paying $18.50. She ran the three furlongs against a stiff breeze in 0:35 2-5.

Quickly, beaten about 10 lengths by Postscript in her last start, beat the latter by a half length to account for the purse in the second race. Postscript closed a big gap to beat Candescent a length for the place. Earl Porter sent Quickly to the front just after the start and the mare, going in her top form, was ridden hard to maintain her advantage. Many of the betting fraternity must have disregarded the winner's last effort, for she paid slightly more than 3 to 1. No Saint, the choice, stopped after sampling the pace.

Ding Bin Is Winner.

Favorite players, who were able to record but one success on each of the two previous days, were assured of at least their customary daily winner when Ding Bin sped to a three-lengths score in the third event. Taking command from Nansin in the early stages, Ding Bin continued with little effort and held Moane Keala at bay. Broadsword, which finished a half length farther back in third place, and Erebus, the fourth horse, would have been closer with better handling. Ding Bin returned $6.20.

Civil War ran like an even-money choice should run in the six furlongs of the fourth. The Wise Counsellor colt dashed into a quick lead and spread-eagled his field, coasting past the wire three lengths clear of the fast-closing Broad Meadows. Aegis, winner of his last three in Maryland competition, was a non-threatening third.

Gold Basis Fails.

Gold Basis, which recently returned to competition after being away from the races since 1933, was a big disappointment in the sixth event of a mile and a furlong. This fellow, which once raced with the topnotchers, was placed outside the calls by Starter Cassidy. He broke poorly, lacked speed and pulled up lame. Favorite players went lame with him. The winner turned up in the well-played second choice. Golden Way, which came from behind to head the pacemaking Chartres. Earl Porter rode the winner for a double. Smooth Crossing was third.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—QUICKLY, $8.10, $4.30, $3.70; POSTSCRIPT, $5.70, $4.00; CANDESCENT, $4.00.

QUICKLY, showing decided improvement over recent races, began very fast, raced CANDESCENT into defeat in the first half-mile, drew away in stretch, but tired suddenly and just lasted to win. POSTSCRIPT, outrun to stretch, came around field and finished with a rush. CANDESCENT was used up in racing along with the early pace. MEROVECH, unable to keep up at any part of the race, was poorly ridden. NO SAINT followed the pace for three furlongs and then quit.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800. Claiming prices, $2,000 to $1,500. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:24. Off at 3:26½. Winner, H. H. Battle's b. g. (4), by Upset—Pigeon Wing. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:12 2-5.

Stella Walsh Gets 30-Day Suspension

Penalty Is Held Light but Track Star Will Miss Polish Games.

CLEVELAND, Feb. 15 (AP).—Amateur Athletic Union officials hobbled the flying feet of Stella Walsh, holder of several world's sprint records, today, with a 30-day suspension from amateur competition.

It was all because the Polish-born girl athlete played with an amateur girls' basket ball team in Buffalo, January 27 in a preliminary to a profesional contest.

That, said the A. A. U., was in violation of a rule forbidding an amateur to participate on the same program with professionals.

"I didn't know there was such a rule," Miss Walsh replied. "I didn't know my amateur standing was in danger. If I wanted to turn professional I could have done it long ago—and made plenty of money."

Rule Not Widely Known.

Local officials who announced the suspension said the penalty was light because the rule was not widely known. It was adopted only last December.

James A. Lee, secretary of the Cleveland district of the A. A. U., added that he was convinced Miss Walsh was innocent of intent to violate the rule.

The suspension, authorized by Dan J. Ferris, of New York, national secretary of the organization, will prevent the girl athlete from taking part in any amateur contest during the period covered, including the Polish Falcons track meet March 2, in which she had been scheduled to appear.

Miss Walsh, whose name is an Americanized form of the Polish "Walasiewicz," holds the women's world records for the 60, 80 and 100 meter runs, and is a near-champion in hurling the discus.

Although she has resided in Cleveland since early childhood, her world records were won as a citizen of Poland and she represented that country in the 1932 Olympics.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

For further proof address the author, inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Sir John Bowring was famous not only as a linguist but also as a composer of religious songs, an expert on monetary affairs and as the hasty diplomat who started a war between China and Great Britain.

He developed his talent for languages early, and learned to speak 100 foreign languages and to read 100 more. Through this knowledge of languages he rendered a notable service to literature by translating works of all nations, particularly poetic works, into English.

In the world of finance he saw the need for greater simplicity in the English money system. He invented the florin which has come to be one of the most convenient coins used in the English system. As a composer he is chiefly remembered for his "In the Cross of Christ I Glory."

While serving as ambassador to China, Bowring unwisely ordered the bombardment of some Chinese forts after a ship under the protection of the English had been insulted. This action, taken without consulting the British government, brought about a war between the two nations.

Strange as it seems, measure of land used to be based on the capacity of oxen for work. However much a yoke could plough in a day was considered an acre. The acre thus varied, and still does. The Scotch acre is 1.27 English acres, and the Irish acre is 1.62 English acres.

Leemans and Sheperd Renew Rivalry as G. W. Plays West. Md.

Three Court Games Here Tonight

Maryland Is Host to Generals; Wilson in Home Contest.

TUFFY LEEMANS, the hula-hipped George Washington half back, and Bill shepherd, the human projectile that bored through Western Maryland's grid opponents last season, will match aim and wits tonight when the Colonials and Terrors meet in basket ball over on H street.

The game is one of three rounding out the evening's collegiate sports program. Maryland plays Washington and Lee at College Park, and Wilson Teachers entertain Randolph-Macon at Wilson in the two remaining contests.

A small percentage of the Nation's population thought that both Leemans and Shepherd rated berths on the 1934 all-American eleven, but both were overlooked in the final tabulation. Tonight they meet as just a couple of basket ball players, but unless they have lost the old competitive spirit their meeting will be accompanied by a superabundance of action.

Last Appearance Here.

Shepherd's appearance probably will be his last in Washington in a nathletic role, and also his first as a benedict. He was married about three weeks ago in Cumberland, Md. Since he will play with the Boston National Leaguers next season, he undoubtedly will not be seen in this city.

Maryland wil ltry to gain a new foothold against the Generals. The slipshod play of Coach Burt Shipley's men in their last two games sent the Terps' stock to a new low, but a win over Washington and Lee will be sweet balm for the wounds of recent defeat. W. and L. defeated Maryland last year in the Southern Conference tournament when the Terps were rated odd-on favorites.

Results of the Maryland-Virginia boxing match at Charlottesville, Va., will be announced during the basket ball game.

The loss of Tipton, Keyser and Sachs was felt keenly by the future pedagogues yesterday at Trenton, N. J., where they lost to Trenton State Teachers, and without this trio Wilson will be the underdog tonight.

Cunningham Rules Fovirite Tonight

tel, hero of the Millrose meet, has been deprived of expected keen competition in the Halpin half-mile because of the withdrawal of Elton Brown, sensational Kansas City A. C. runner who is unbeaten so far indoors. Brown has not recovered sufficiently from a severe cold to return to competition.

Sears Is Favored.

On the finishing form he displayed two weeks ago, Ray Sears, the sensational Butler University distance runner, should take the measure of Joe McCluskey and John W. (Bill) Follows, New York A. C. rivals, in the two-mile invitation race. This should be a real "dog fight."

Jack Torrance, of Louisiana State, greatest weight tosser of all time, should splinter the world indoor shotput record without even perspiring. This athletic giant, who has hurled the 16-pound ball more than 57 feet outdoors, only has to do better than 52 feet 8¾ inches—Leo Sexton's indoor mark—to become possessor of all shotput records.

Keith Brown, who soared to a new pole vault mark of 14 feet 4 inches for indoor competition in the 1934 New York A. C. games, will attempt to better this figure. The high jump record of 6 feet 8¾ inches, also set at last year's meet by Walter Marty, will be attacked by Cornelius Johnson, the California Negro, and George Spitz.

Risks Record

DON KEYSER, Western Maryland College's 145-pounder, undefeated this season, who will be a favorite to defeat Carmen La Salle, of Catholic U., in tonight's bouts at Brookland.

V. M. I. Cubs Beat Roosevelt Quintet

Shomo Paces Freshmen to 41-29 Victory.

Lexington, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—The V. M. I. freshman basket ball team, paced by Capt. Bill Shomo with 21 points, defeated Roosevelt High School, of Washington, here today, 41 to 29.

Both teams played raggedly in the first half, in which the score was tied five times before the Cadets spurted to lead at the intermission, 18 to 13. Shomo and Ruffo headed a second-half attack that increased the lead, though Baroni and Ey, Roosevelt guards, kept their team in the running with neat long-distance shots.

Coach Snail Caldwell used 14 members of the V. M. I. squad.

Alexandrians Rally to Top Taksils

Ring Up 20 Points in Last 11 Minutes to Win by 33-22 Score.

TRAILING, 20 to 13, with 11 minutes to play, Alexandria High School emerged from the shadow of defeat to administer a 33-to-22 beating to the host Silver Spring team yesterday at Silver Spring and practically clinch the Inter-Suburban league crown.

The Twins were baffled for nearly three quarters, Silver Spring taking the lead, 6-5, in the first quarter and increasing it to 16-10 at half time. Midway in the third quarter Shorb sank two baskets in a row to boost the margin to 20-13, but the pace was too much for the tiring Taksils and Burell and Nugent scored almost at will in the next period.

Burell easily took scoring honors with 17 points, Nugent had 11. Clyde Linkins, of the Taksils, playing with a heavy cold, was the principal factor of their good stand and it was not until Linkins went out of the game that the vistors ran up the winning margin.

Harrisonburg, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.). American University cagers could not cope with the sharp-shooting Eagles of Bridgewater College tonight and went down to a 38-to-30 defeat.

American University picked up in the third quarter and once was within 5 points of Bridgewater, but then the Virginia Eagles started shooting again and drew away.

Gillette and Cassell were outstanding for American U., while H. Scott and Sanger set the pace for Bridgewater.

Scheible Steals Court Show From Bassin, Nolan and Dean

By John R. Vosburgh.

HOW good is a good basket ball player? Or, to be more specific, how good are Harry Bassin and Tommy Nolan, much heralded Georgetown freshman aces, compared with Deadeye Lavelle Dean, Eastern captain and leader of the interhigh series scoring race?

The three got together this week when Eastern scored its startling upset, 42 to 35, over the freshman "wonder team," and since the trio are the center of considerable controversy anent their respective talents with a basket ball, every attempt Bassin, Nolan and Dean took at the hoop was duly recorded in black and white. So was every attempt taken by their teammates. This is what the figures showed:

Dean took 10 shots at the net and made 3.

Nolan took 15 shots and made 2.

Neither Dean nor Bassin nor Nolan proved to have as good an eye as Red Scheible, Eastern's colorful guard. Scheible netted 6 baskets in 11 attempts. On the basis of fewer shots, Buddy Nau, star freshman guard, had the best average, making two baskets in three attempts.

Now, it is impossible to calculate perfectly the comparative ability of players in one game. Nolan obviously was off form. For another thing, one man may be played by a brilliant opponent, and the other by a mediocre opponent.

Gay Edelin, unerring Easterner, sank 6 baskets in 14 shots at the basket; Chick Hollidge, 3 out of 6; Buddy Shaner, 1 out of 3. Carroll Shore, former Central High ace, made 3 out of 6; Petroskey, of Georgetown, 1 out of 4; Hardy, none out of 2, Tommy Keating, 2 out of 8; Ed Kurtyka, 3 out of 9.

Best foul shooter was Shore with 2 out of 2, but he also committed four of Georgetown's six to go out of the game. Edelin sank 3 out of 4; Hollidge, 2 out of 5. Petroskey 1 out of 3 and Hardy 2 out of 3.

The Freshman made 15 out of 52 attempts from the floor; Eastern, 19 out of 44.

Said Referee Scully after the game: "That's good stuff, those statistics. But they don't show how the Georgetown boys were saying 'Get Dean; check Dean; watch dean.'"

Penn State Foe Of Navy in 2 Sports

Boxing and Basket Ball Clashes Top Annapolis Program Today.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Feb. 15.—Penn State College, old rival of the Naval Academy in athletics, will send two teams to Annapolis tomorrow to compete with the Midshipmen. The contests will be in boxing and basket ball and they will be the head-liners of another banner card to be presented by the Naval lads.

Rivalry between the Tars and Lions is particularly keen. It has extended over a score of years. The two institutions generally have the outstanding teams in collegiate circles. The Pennsylvanians have always given the Middies a tight rub but have never succeeded in winning a dual meet, though topping them in intercollegiate finals. The Lions also have a strong court team this season, so it looks as though the Middies are in for a busy time of it in both sports.

Wrestles Lehigh.

Another big event of the day will be the annual wrestling match with Lehigh, collegiate champions of the last few years, and who boast a record of 24 consecutive dual victories. Navy varsity teams will engage City College of New York in swimming and water polo, and Carnegie Tech in a small-bore rifle match, while the plebes will take on the boxers of Staunton Military Academy and Hun School of New Jersey at basket ball, to complete a card of eight home contests.

The Navy varsity swordsmen will be in New York for a meeting with City College.

Cumberland Cloakers Win in League Game

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 15 (Spl.). In one of the most thrilling games on record in the Inter-State Basket Ball League this season, Coach Johnny Long's Cumberland Cloakers, led by Edgar "Ike" Cessna, one-time Allegany High School ace, remained in the race for the second half championship by smashing the five-game winning streak of the Westvaco A. A. on the Central Y. M. C. A. court, 38 to 35.

Each team scored 15 field goals, but the Cloakers held an 8-to-5 edge at the charity line. Bobby Cavanaugh worked a fine game and cabled 12 personal fouls on Westvaco and nine on the home club.

Bluebird in Garage.

Sir Malcolm Campbell's Bluebird stayed in its garage, with its half dozen mechanics still tinkering with it.

Campbell, now that yesterday's test at a speed he estimated at 200 miles an hour has acted as a safety valve for his pent-up restlessness, examined the beach carefully and decided that if it were possible Bluebird would roll in another test tomorrow. Adjustments necessary after yesterday's "shakedown cruise" have all been made.

Sunday, still depending on the beach, Campbell may shoot at the 272.108-mile record he set here two years ago. Prevailing winds still were from the south, however, and beach conditions were not improving.

New World Record Is Set in Italy

Florence, Italy, Feb. 15 (U.P.).—A new world record for automobiles with 5.000 cubic centimeter piston displacement was set today by Hans von Struck, Austrian race driver, who traveled 320.267 kilometers (approximately 200 miles) per hour. The former record of 317.600 was held by Rudolph Garacciola.

East's Court Teams Superior To West's, Roland Logan Says

THE eternal question of whether Eastern basket ball is better than the Midwestern brand, or vice versa, met up yesterday with Roland Logan, George Washington University's coach, and proponents of the Western style of play were thrown for a four-paragraph loss.

In no uncertain terms did Logan go on record in favor of the Easterners' method of passing, cutting, blocking, screening and winning ball games. He should know whereof he speaks, for he played six years in the West and was associated closely with the game for 11 years.

He played on a few of the 15 championship teams "Fog" Allen developed in 17 years at Kansas, and was a participent and later a spectator at seven national A. A. U. basket ball tournaments. So Mr. Logan knows his Midwest basket ball. Yet two years in Eastern competition has convinced him that the boys this side of the Alleghenies are more adept at the old peach-basket pastime.

Handle Ball More Cleanly.

"There is more individual ability in Eastern basket ball than the ordinary Midwestern player boasts," Logan said last night. "I think the Eastern teams handle the ball more cleanly, they pass more accurately and they have so many more tricks that throw you off balance and fake you out of position than the Westerners.

"I've seen Big Six, Big Ten games, I've seen the West against the East over a period of years and I honestly don't think that in a game where the teams are physically equal the West can beat the East.

"In the Midwest they employ a slower type of offense. It is more methodical than the Eastern offense, and only set plays are used, and a zone defense is the rule rather than the exception. Dribbing to a certain key position on the floor or holding the ball on a certain side is the method of signaling for plays.

"But your Eastern players set up their plays as they go along. They wait for an opening, for a break, when they get one they pass, cut and take a shot before you can get set for what's coming.

"I'll take an Eastern team over a Midwestern team every time."

V. P. I. Matmen Face V. M. I. Tonight

Meet at Blacksburg Tops Busy Week-End for Tech Teams.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.).—The Virginia Tech matmen, recent winners over North Carolina State and Davidson, will face V. M. I. in the meets tomorrow in War Memorial Hall. The mat encounters headline a busy week-end during which Tech teams will compete in four contests away from home.

For the home events, Coach Earl Tilson will shift his varsity line-up in four weights. Ben Adkins, Danville, will replace John Allison at 135; Bill Catlin, Jacksonville, Fla., will replace Max Gooden at 155, with Gooden or Jim Key, Redford, slated for the 165-pound bout in place of Bob Priode, who was advised by the college physician to give up the sport until next year. Jack Bell, of Ivor, succeeds Rupert Porter, 175-pounder, who was injured in the match with North Carolina State.

The Tech freshmen will face the V. M. I. rivals with two straight victories to their credit. The line-up of Starr, Pittman, Magill, Grannan, Tokarz, Hewitt, Woolwine and Davis will stand.

Hour Is Changed.

Due to the midwinter dances, which are being held here this week-end, the hour of the matches has been changed. The freshmen will start their bouts at 1:30 p. m. and the varsity teams at 7:30.

Tech's varsity boxers, recent winners over Washington and Lee, will face North Carolina State ringmen at Raleigh with five first-string entries out of the line-up. Bob Callahan, 135; Joe Russell, 155; Hank Spruill, 165; and Buddy Herman and Bob Fausel, hard hitting 145 pounders, will be unable to accompany the team. Tech will probably be forced to forfeit the 175-pound bout. Charles Hull is due to fight 115; Joe Blaiklock, 125; Fred Hall, 135; Pat Gallagher, 145; Willard Rothery, 155; Mel Carmel, 165, and Ben Dodge, heavyweight. With top-notch fighters absent, Tech has little chance to win.

Richmond Five Routs V. P. I., 40 to 20

Hash and Jacobs Lead in Attack; Fittro of Rivals, Hurt.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—Richmond got away to a slow start in a basket ball tilt with Virginia Tech here tonight, but finally emerged the victor with a 40-to-20 score.

Herb Hash, Richmond center, was easily the outstanding man on the floor as he ringed the hoop for 14 points. His nearest rival for individual scoring honors was his teammate Jacobs, who hung up nine points.

Louis Fittro, V. P. I. star and Tech's mainstay in many a hard-fought contest, twisted his left ankle during the first half and was unable to finish. It will be inspected by a doctor tomorrow, but his teammates fear it might mean he would be out of the game the rest of the season.

Overcoming their early slowness, the Richmonders began shooting accurately during the first half and at the interval were leading by 16 to 9.

LEXINGTON, Va., Feb. 15 (Spl.). Two Washington and Lee teams will go into action here tomorrow in the first meets of a three-day indoor sports carnival that will be climaxed when the Generals meet the Spiders of Richmond University Tuesday night in Doremus gymnasium.

The varsity swimmers, with triumphs over William and Mary and the championship Blue Devils of Duke to their credit, will meet Virginia Tech in the Doremus gymnasium pool at 4 p. m. tomorrow in the first of four engagements for Washington and Lee teams here. Tomorrow night Washington and Lee boxers, steadily improving, will fight Hampden-Sydney here; Monday night Coach A. E. Tankmen Favored.

The Generals' tankmen will be top favorites over V. P. I. in swimming by virtue of their victory over Duke, regarded as the strongest swimming outfit in the Southern Conference area. Coached by Cy Twombley, the W. and L. swimming squad includes eight lettermen and a promising lot of sophomores. They will meet Virginia here February 21 in the final dual meet of the season before the conference tournament at Durham.

Interest centers around the wrestling meet with Michigan Monday night, with the Northerners bringing one of their strongest squads in years here for the meet. Captained by Hugo Bonino, 233-pound heavyweight title holder in the Southern Conference, the Generals are given an even chance of tripping the invaders and keeping their record of victories clean.

Prerace Warm-up Belies Cunningham

stretch his legs, raise and lower his head like a thoroughbred race horse just turned out of the stable.

Yes, you see plenty of Cunningham before his race. And you tag him as a show-off. You wonder how he has anything left for the race by the time he is through pacing around the track. He must run 3 or 4 miles in practice before he toes the mark for the battle. Actually Cunningham is shy, modest and thoroughly self-effacing. Because of the scar tissue on his legs, he must work for at least three-quarters of an hour loosening up his muscles, and also the skin of his legs and get thoroughly warm. He warms up unconscious of spectators, officials, competitors. His mind is taken up with his body. He is tinkering with his engine the way a race driver does with his car or his motorboat.

Bonthron, of Princeton, is of a different temperament. He is a manufactured runner, a runner more by accident of native talent and good coaching, but he is an instinctive fighter. I don't think he gets the pleasure out of running that Cunningham does. But once the gun is fired he will fight until he drops. I don't think he knows as much about running the mile as Cunningham does. But I also think that when he is right that he can give you a bigger kick at the finish if he has managed to rate himself well along behind the leader. Down at Princeton when Cunningham did his marvelous 4:6 mile for the world's record, Bonnie was left far behind with half a lap of the track left to go so that Cunningham had to finish all by himself and run his race against the giant clock at the end of Palmer Stadium.

The strange thing about this trio running tomorrow night is that while Venzke always runs third to them, neither has equaled Venzke's time for the Baxter mile of 4:10. Cunningham holds the world's indoor record of 4:08, but he has never hit Venzke's time for the Baxter mile. I have watched Venzke try everything to beat those two. He has kept back and run behind them to try and nip them at the finish, and he has run out in front and made the pace trying to kill them off in the running, and nothing has worked. But he is still trying. I suppose it is his time of 4:10 that keeps him in there. He has done it, they haven't, at least in that race. And you really run the mile against the clock and let the human opponents take care of themselves, as far as you are able. Nurmi never answered a challenge. But Americans are different. There is something bred into them that will not permit them to let a man pass without a struggle. Well, I wouldn't miss the race.

Maryland's Frosh Five Downs C. U. Yearlings

Led by Waverly Wheeler, former Tech High basket ball technician, the University of Maryland freshman court team squelched the Catholic University yearlings, 44 to 21, yesterday at Maryland's Ritchie Coliseum.

The Cardinals' only threat faded almost with the opening whistle as the Old Liners whirled away to a 19-to-7 lead in the first half.

Grain Advances On Federal Farm Estimate

Cotton Advances Into New High Levels; May Up to 12.50.

Chicago, Feb. 15 (AP).—Stimulating aspects of Government figures relative to live stock on farms had considerable to do with bringing about higher prices today for grains.

Leading unofficial authorities said whereas the Government report indicated that in grain-consuming units the live stock total is 19 per cent less than a five-year average, the farm supply of grains is 43 per cent less that a similar average. An advance of the hog market today to fresh high-price records, together with active demand for corn available to be delivered at once, had a likewise strengthening effect on values of all cereals.

Wheat closed firm, ¾ to 1¼ above yesterday's finish, May, 97½@97⅝, corn, ½ to 1 cent up, oats, ½ to ¾ advanced, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 5 cents.

Contributing to the upward trend of the wheat market was a semi-official assertion that the Canadian wheat carry-over supply on August 1 next would be under 100,000,000 bushels, and perhaps total only 81,000,000. Trade authorities here noted, however, this would seem to require average exports of 6,000,000 bushels a week from Canada throughout the remainder of the season. On the other hand, Winnipeg messages said overnight export business in Canadian wheat had been done from both coasts, with seaboard houses taking all offerings at today's opening in Winnipeg.

Heavy Selling Against Corn.

Advances of the Chicago wheat market today were in the face of heavy selling of wheat against simultaneous equal speculative purchases of corn. A bullish factor as to wheat was absence of snow protection over the greater part of domestic winter wheat territory, with abnormally dry conditions in large sections Northwest. There were suggestions, too, that considerable winter wheat Southwest would have to depend on one chance out of ten for frequent and heavy rainfalls in May.

Official announcement of a big decrease in the number of hogs on farms was regarded as having been discounted in advance. It was authoritatively stated that the hog decrease had been given full consideration in all estimates of farm need for corn this year. Oats traders took their cue from corn.

Provisions averaged higher with hog values and with grains.

Indications Are That New York Bankers Will Oppose Government Control of Federal Reserve as Dangerous Feature of New Bill.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York, Feb. 15.—It is becoming increasingly apparent that New York bankers, in the testifying on the pending banking bill of 1935 in Washington, will stress the virtually complete Government control over the Federal Reserve System as it provides the most dangerous feature of the measure.

Officials of individual Federal Reserve banks, it is understood here, personally share this concern. However, fears of reprisals from Washington will probably cause most of them to leave the task of presenting the dangers inherent in this proposal to private bankers, especially since the new bill would make the governors of the Federal Reserve banks hold their office only with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

At the forthcoming hearings on the bill extended reference will doubtless be made by bankers to the German experience in the immediate post-war years. That episode in financial history, in fact, stands out as the most terrible of all examples of what may happen with complete government domination of a nation's banking system.

The Reichsbank, before May 26, 1922, was entirely under the control of the German government. The shareholders had only a nominal voice in the bank's affairs. The board of directors was appointed by the Emperor before and during the war, and by the president of the republic during the immediate post-war years. The Reichsbank was thus in fact no more than a government department, and both its board of directors and its president were completely subordinated to the chancellor of the Reich.

Schacht Says Chancellor Had Control of Credit.

Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, discussing the condition then prevailing, has said that "the Chancellor could at any time merely issue instructions to this body of officials to give him credits which he desired. Any opposition on their part would at best have had a moral effect; its practical results would have been nil."

Following the war, the German government lacked the strength or courage to put its financial affairs in order. Accordingly, it resorted freely to the practice, already well developed during the war, of discounting its short-term treasury bills in ever increasing amounts with the Reichsbank. The latter then issued its own bank notes to pay the government for these obligations. Hence, although the German government itself did not print paper money, the same effect was obtained through the use of the Reichsbank as an agency for absorbing unlimited amounts of government obligations. As a result, the volume of Reichsbank notes outstanding rapidly rose to fantastic figures, and the mark became practically worthless.

It is true that Germany had a serious adverse balance of payments at the time, and also faced the disastrous reparations obligation imposed after the war. However, many German bankers and economists argued, then and later, that the complete debauch of the currency could have been checked if the Reichsbank had resisted the government's financial policy, and insisted that steps be taken to balance the budget as a condition for buying additional government obligations.

Directors Win Freedom In Operating Reichsbank.

Criticism from bankers and business men, despite their lack of voice in the management of the Reichbank, finally led to a change in its control. A law passed in May, 1922, gave the directors of the Reichbank complete freedom from government interference in the conduct of the institution. The Government abandoned the right to appoint, or even to veto the election, of directors. However, international difficulties, and the occupation of the Ruhr prevented immediate reform of the Reichsbank's policy. In August, 1923, the newly independent management of the Reichsbank finally did inform the German Government of its intention to cease extending unsecured credits at the close of the year. This forced the Government to take steps to balance its budget, establish a stable currency and cease relying upon the printing presses.

The extent to which the Reichsbank was used to debauch the German monetary system is shown by the increase in its holdings of Treasury bills. At the end of January, 1921, it held 50 billion marks of such Government paper. On November 15, 1923, its holdings had increased to 189,000,000 trillions. To pay for these ever expanding purchases of Government bonds, it increased its notes in circulation during this period from 66 billion to 92,000,000 trillions.

Under the Dawes Plan, rigid restrictions were imposed on the relation between the Reichsbank and the German Government, after the bitter experiences of the inflation period. Complete control was vested in an independent board of directors. Direct loans to the Govrenment were limited to 100,000,000 Reichsmarks, while the Reichsbank could discount or accept as collateral no more than 400,000,000 Reichsmarks of short-term Treasury bills from others.

It was not until October, 1933, in fact, that the Reichbank was permitted again to acquire bonds of the Government, its subdivisions and agencies. However, even under the Nazi government, its management has been entrusted to an independent and conservative executive, who in financial matters appears to guide, rather than to follow, the Government.

Bond Market Led by Advance In U. S. Issues

Transactions in Missouri Pacific Are Feature in Railroad Group.

New York, Feb. 15 (AP).—Under leadership of United States Government and prime corporate issues, bond market prices worked gradually higher again today. Transfers were slightly higher than on Thursday, aggregating $10,663,000, par value, against $8,650,000, and of this amount the turnover in Governments accounted for $1,860,000, against $1,800,000 the day before.

Several Treasury issues and some of the indirect obligations of the Government bettered their old 1934-35 highs, including the 3s of 1946-48, up 2-32ds, at 102.28, and Home Owners Loan 3s up 1-32d, at 101.6. Home Owners Loan 2 2-3s, the issue that is currently being absorbed by a strong investment demand as fast as they are surrendered by former mortgagees, also were in high favor again and gained 2-32ds, at 99.6.

Not much volume was required to establish new highs for a number of the better rated corporate issues, including Santa Fe 4s, up ⅞ at 110⅜; Brooklyn Union Gas 5s, up ½ at 116¾; Chesapeake & Ohio 4s, up ¾ at 118, and Detroit Edison 4½s, up ½ at 110.

Utility Bonds of almost all classes were generally higher. Issues of New Orleans Public Service bonds advanced 2 points under a heavy demand. Others gaining nearly that much included Laclede Gas Light 5½s at 68, North American Edison 5s, and San Antonio Public Service 6s.

Heavy trading in bonds of the Missouri Pacific featured the railroad group where many issues were purchased at higher prices, including Panhandle 4s, Baltimore & Ohio 5s, Rio Grande Western 4s, and Southern Pacific 4½s. Missouri Pacific 5s were more than a point higher at 28½.

A feature of the foreign section was renewed strength in most of the Argentine bonds. French and Polish issues were also a shade higher.

Lowered Wages Halt Recovery, Antonow Says

Declares Farmers and Earners Fail to Get Adequate Share.

New York, Feb. 15.—The depressed economic conditions of today are directly traceable to the failure of farmers and wage earners to share more fully in the income of American industry, Samuel L. Antonow, president of the Vadsco Sales Corporation, stated here today.

"Had these two producing groups received a larger portion of the value of our industrial production we never would have come to the deplorable economic conditions in which the country finds itself today," Mr. Antonow said. "The possession of greater purchasing power by individuals in the agricultural and labor groups would have brought as prosperity of an undreamed of nature and the available purchasing power would have resulted in a labor shortage instead of the labor surplus that we have today.

"Dr. Walter Rautenstrauch has shown that if, instead of getting an increasingly smaller proportion of the national income, farmers and workers had shared in the national income as they were sharing in 1917, the laborer's income would have been 56 per cent above what he actually received in 1932, and the farmer's, 216 per cent over his 1932 level."

Mr. Antonow mentioned the increase in the number of so-called white collar workers in the United States in the past 25 years. They represent, he said, 16 per cent of the total number of gainfully employed workers. That is, one white collar worker for every six manual workers. Fifty years ago the ratio was one white collar worker for every twenty-five manual employes.

Stocks—Industrials staged an early rally, but were moved from the tops by lack of enthusiasm in utilities and slow follow-ups by rails. Mixed news on yearly reports did little to sustain the higher levels. Trading volume increased to 726,482 shares.

Bonds—Federals and prime corporate issues led the bond market into higher ground. Several Treasury issues bettered 1934-35 highs. Utility bonds in almost all classes were rated higher. Sales turnover was up to $10,663,000.

Curb—Cross-currents during the major part of the session turned into moderate gains at the close. Senior power issues carried lower while a number of industrials moved higher. Sales increased to 174,000 shares.

Wheat—Further advances in live stock figures pushed grain prices into higher levels. Another bullish influence was a lowered estimate of the Canadian wheat carry-over. May closed at 97½.

Cotton—Trading was slow during the greater part of the session and accelerated toward the close. Most contracts moved into new high high ground for the year. Closes were steady at net advances of 6 to 9 points. May closed at 12.49.

Sugar—Raw sugar sold at 2.90. Refined was stepped up to 4.50 by all but one concern which still was doing business at 4.30 for fine granulated.

Coffee—Spot coffee was steady. Rio No. 7 sold at 8¼, and Santos No. 4 at 10⅜.

Silver—Bar silver was higher. In New York it was up ⅜ to 54¾ cents per ounce. In London it also gained to close 3-16 pence higher at 24 3-16 pence. (United States equivlaent 54¾ cents per ounce.)

Week's Revenue Freight Loads Are Decreased by 5,604 Cars

Loading of revenue freight for the week ended February 9 totaled 592,560 cars, the Association of American Railroads announced today. This was a decrease of 5,604 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 18,662 cars above the corresponding week in 1934 and an increase of 87,897 cars above the corresponding week in 1933.

Miscellaneous freight loading for the week ended February 9 totaled 210,584 cars, a decrease of 134 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 15,698 cars above the corresponding week in 1934, and an increase of 67,766 cars above the corresponding week in 1933.

Loading of merchandise less than carload lot freight totaled 155,535 cars, an increase of 1,169 cars above the preceding week, but a decrease of 4,813 cars below the corresponding week in 1934. It was, however, an increase of 1,426 cars above the same week in 1933.

Broad Market Carries Stocks To Higher Plane

Selling of Utilities Holds General Rise in Check.

New York, Feb. 15 (AP).—The industrial stock list came to life today and staged a fair rally, but selling of utilities dampened some of the earlier enthusiasm and not all gains were fully held.

Bonds were steady with a good undertone apparent. Commodities found a friendly following. Activity was considerably stepped up in both securities and staples.

The day's news was of a mixed character. American Can reported 1934 earnings equal to $6.72 a share compared with $5.04 in the previous year, and Owens-Illinois Glass announced an improvement in net to the equivalent of $5.41 a share in contrast with $4.86 in 1933.

American Woolen Loss.

At the same time, American Woolen revealed it had operated last year at a loss of $5,458,494, while in the previous year it had realized a profit of $7,053,088. The weekly carloadings report showed a decline from the previous week of 5,604 cars, or a little more than the normal seasonal setback.

American Can got up more than 3 points because of its earnings figures and closed a shade below its best at 119, but still above the highest previous level for 1934-35. Owens-Illinois lifted 1½ points to 89½. Continental Can and Hazel Atlas Glass also attracted a following at advances of more than a point each.

Some brokerage quarters reported a mild revival of inflation sentiment and some of the so-called inflation equities attracted a following. U. S. Smelting, American Smelting, Howe Sound and Cerro de Pasco gained around 2 points each and McIntyre Porcupine, Dome and other mines improved as much as a point.

Market Is Broader.

The market was broader and more active than for nearly a month. Turnover in the stock exchange aggregated 726,482 shares. The Associated Press average for 60 stocks advanced .3 of a point to 38.9. The industrials used in the average were up .8 of a point to 54.5.

Gains of 1 to around 2 points were scored by Allied Chemical, American Chicle, Case, Caterpillar Tractor, Coca Cola, First National Stores, McKeesport Tin Plate, National Steel, Underwood-Elliott-Fisher and Radio preferred "B."

The usual leaders mostly confined their improvement to fractions to a point each. In this group were U. S. Steel at 36, Bethlehem at 29¾, American Telephone at 104, Santa Fe at 43⅜, International Harvester at 41, Baltimore & Ohio at 11½, Woolworth at 54¾, Westinghouse at 39¼ and Western Union at 28⅞.

The Dollar Abroad

The value of the dollar against leading foreign currencies continued today to move with narrow irregularity.

In London the American unit moved ahead moderately at 4.87 7-16 to the pound sterling, while in New York the pound lost ⅛ of a cent at $4.87⅝.

In the French market the dollar eased to the equivalent of 6.60 cents to the franc, and in American trading the franc lifted .00⅛ of a cent to 6.59⅝ cents.

Other gold currencies showed mixed moves in New York. The guilder at 67.60 cents was up .03 of a cent, while the Swiss franc at 32.36 cents and the belga at 23.33 cents were each off .01 of a cent.

Southern Railway Buys 16,000 Tons of Rails

Birmingham, Ala., Feb. 15 (AP).—An order for 16,000 tons of steel rail today was placed with the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. by the Southern Railway.

J. L. Perry, president of T. C. I., said the Southern had authorized him to announce the order, which brought the rail log to over 60,000 tons.

The Ensley rail mill went into operation Tuesday, after a lay-off of several months, adding 1,800 men to pay rolls, while elsewhere in the district there was a marked upward trend in employment.

Pepco Report Stresses High Producing Cost

William McClellan Presides at Annual Stockholders' Meeting.

By Karl von Lewinski.

Despite the fact that the Potomac Electric Power Co. increased its power sales 12.2 per cent during the past year, the net income showed a drop of 8.9 per cent, according to the report of President William McClellan at the annual stockholders' meeting, yesterday.

McCLELLAN.

Gross revenue during 1934 increased to $12,127,511 in direct proportion to the larger output.

Any hopes of increased profits, however, McClellan stated, were submerged in the additional expense of increased raw material prices and labor costs. Reduction of the working week from 48 hours to 40 on a general principle of no reduction in pay was cited as supplying the equivalent of a 16 2-3 per cent pay increase.

Customers Gain 5 Per Cent.

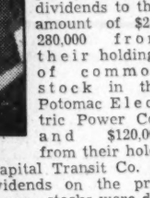
The total number of customers at the close of 1934 was 160,407, an increase of 5 per cent, while the average number of kilowatt hours consumed per domestic customer in 1934 was 941, an increase of 73 kilowatt hours per customer, or 8.4 per cent over 1933.

In the residential field, McClellan reported, the electric health kitchen idea is gaining ground rapidly. In this connection it was stated that during 1934 265 complete electric kitchens were installed in new residences, as against 102 such kitchens in 1933 and 58 in 1932. Eighty-six new air conditioning installations, with a total connected load of 15,868 h. p., were added in 1934.

In connection with the pay increases put in effect by the power company, it was noted that the power company yesterday put into force a wage increase of 10 cents per hour for all employes. Made retroactive to January 1, it was begun by distribution of checks to cover the higher schedule for the last six weeks.

Washington Railway.

Stockholders of the Washington Railway and Electric Co. (a holding company), also met and were tendered the annual report by President William F. Ham.



HAM.

During the year the company received dividends to the amount of $2,280,000 from their holdings of common stock in the Potomac Electric Power Co., and $120,000 from their holdings in the Capital Transit Co.

Regular dividends on the preferred and common stocks were declared and paid in the past year, in addition to a $20 special dividend on each share of common.

At the organization meetings held after the reports were filed, C. L. Carr was appointed assistant comptroller of the power company and W. L. Jones was promoted to assistant to the vice president and general manager of the same firm.

Other officers were reelected as follows:

For the Potomac Electric Co., William McClellan, president; A. G. Neal, vice president and general manager; J. H. Ferry, vice president and chief engineer; G. M. Thompson, secretary and assistant treasurer; J. E. Tenly, treasurer; E. D. Detwiler, assistant secretary; H. G. Haydon, comptroller; Bowen and Kelly, general counsel.

Herndon Bank Reopens.

The Citizens National Bank of Herndon opened its doors yesterday, a month and five days after its predecessor, the National Bank of Herndon, closed because of a $70,000 shortage in its funds.

Business will be continued in the building occupied by the old bank. Capital structure has been fixed at $50,000 with a surplus of $5,000. Half of its stock is held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as preferred stock.

The common stock is held by 75 citizens of the community. The new bank will purchase such assets of the National Bank of Herndon as approved by its board of directors and the comptroller of the currency.

Ralph R. Reed, of Herndon, has been named president, and Mark Turner, of Forestville, vice president. J. B. McDaniels, of Vienna, is cashier.

Directors include Reed and Turner, John Middleton, of Floris; J. P. McMillen, J. L. Nachman, T. Edgar Reed and Dr. Daniel L. Detwiler, all of Herndon.

Walt Mason, Himself

With a Job.

The man who has some sort of task that brings the needed dimes, who can in peace and comfort bask in these distressing times, should count his blessings every day, three times a day or more, and think of jobless men astray on aching feet and sore. His rent is paid, he has some coal, to feed the kitchen fire, and he should be a happy soul without a punctured tire. He has the coin with which to buy the books he'd fain peruse, he has his doughnuts and his pie, and blacking for his shoes. And often he appreciates the blessings he enjoys, and thinks of more unhappy skates with sobs and kindred noise. He isn't getting half the pay that formerly he drew, but he gives thanks because today he has a hen to stew. This is the normal attitude of men with work at hand; they ponder, in a grateful mood, on blessings they command. They think about the countless wights who have no home or bed, who sleep outdoors on rainy nights, and lack the daily bread. But now and then there is a gent who grumbles at his toil; "The coin I earn," is his lament, "won't make the kettle boil. I work too many hours a day, I do, so help me Mike, and I draw down so little pay I am resolved to strike." And having struck, he joins the mob of sad men gone astray, and learns to hunger for the job he vainly threw away.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

BELGIUM and Latvia are the only European nations which are less generous than America in granting annual leave to employes, it was pointed out last night by the American Federation of Government Employes, upon information obtained in a survey conducted by the International Labor Office.

BAKER.

The study in the postal services of Europe was made in support of the I. L. O.'s campaign for restoration of 30 days' leave in Government service. To this end the federation is urging the passage of the Ramspeck bill, H. R. 5152.

E. Claude Babcock, A. F. G. E. president, emphasizes that Europe has experienced as difficult an economic crisis as has America and was not as well equipped to meet it; yet the leave of government employes did not suffer as it has suffered here.

The European study showed that Austrian postal workers get two to five weeks' leave annually; that Belgium grants only 15 days and Latvia only two weeks, and that Bulgaria grants not more than 30 days. It should be borne in mind that postal services in European countries also include the telephone and telegraph systems.

Czechoslovakia gives two to five weeks' leave, based on seniority and other factors. Denmark gives postal and telegraph officials four weeks, telephone employes two to three weeks. Annual leave in Estonia is two to four weeks; in Finland, two weeks to 30 days; in France, 21 days; Germany, 14 to 42 days, and Great Britain, 14 to 27 days.

Hungarian leave rates from 8 to 42 days, and in Italy it does not exceed one month. Luxembourg grants ten days to three weeks; Holland, 12 to 24 days; Norway, 14 to 24 days, and Poland, two to six weeks. In Portugal annual leave must not exceed 30 days; in Rumania, it is 10 to 30 days; in Spain, 15 to 30 days, and in Sweden, most liberal of all, 20 to 45 days. Swiss employes get one to four weeks, and Yugoslavia, 8 to 42 days.

Maurice Levy, examiner, Patent Office, is recovering from an operation at the Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital.

Celebration in Pittsburgh.

A large delegation of Federal officials and officers of the National Federation of Federal Employes and the National Legislative Council of Federal Employe Organizations are in Pittsburgh today to attend a unity dinner to be held tonight. Arranged through Local Union No. 66, NFFE, the affair will bring together the largest number of Federal employes in the history of the Pittsburgh district. More than 2,000 are expected to attend.

From Washington will be, among others, Senator and Mrs. Pat McCarran, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans' affairs; Harry B. Mitchell, president, Civil Service Commission; Luther C. Steward, NFFE president; Gertrude McNally, NFFE secretary-treasurer; Matilda Lindsay, NFFE organizer, and executives of the organizations represented in the National Legislative Council, including its chairman, John J. WHEN the fraternity women hold their annual Panhellenic luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel today, the following Federal employes will be in the group assembled beneath the banner of Beta Sigma Omicron National Fraternity: Mrs. Judson Cobb, Agriculture; Miss Gertrude Kinsley, Civil Service Commission; Miss Elizabeth Mann (C), Shipping Board, and Miss Nattie Richards Tyler, Treasury.

Employes of the Library of Congress are wondering who looked at the 52 clocks to stop them for three days. The master clock, for the first time in 30 years, was pulled down last week and sent off for cleaning and adjustment.

FHA Dance Tonight.

To those who say they have "never won anything," we advise attending the Federal Housing Administration Athletic Association dance at the Raleigh Hotel tonight. The association has assembled such an impressive list of prizes that we don't see how many couples can be missed. The prizes range from cash to merchandise and a trip over Washington. Frank Haske, prize chairman, is assisted by Capt. Swarthout and Miss Swananoa Sears (C).

Diary Guest Tickets.

IF (F), (P) or (C) follows your name in this column, call on the Federal Diary editor today. You will receive tickets to Loew's Fox (stage, Lita Grey Chaplin, Charlie Davis and his radio orchestra and other acts; screen, Clark Gable and Constance Bennett in "After Office Hours"); or to Loew's Palace (second week of "David Copperfield," with cast of more than 65 stars); or to Loew's Columbia (Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell and other stars in "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer").

Diary office hours are daily, except Sunday, 12 noon to 1 p. m., and from 4:30 to 6 p. m.; Saturday, 12 noon to 2:30 p. m.

Matthew W. Stirling, chief of the Bureau of American Ethnology, and Mrs. Stirling, have just returned from a two months vacation trip in California, Central America and other Southern points.

Adjutant General's Office Lodge No. 2, AFGE, will hold a card party and dance at the Willard Hotel February 28, it is announced by Edward McGinnis (P), chairman of the entertainment committee.

Riding as a hobby is being taken up by an increasing number of Federal employes in preparation for warm spring days on Washington's bridle paths. Among those in the classes at the Riding and Hunt Club are Miss Olga Rapp (C), Veterans Administration; Miss Louise O'Hara, Justice; Miss Elizabeth Smith, Senate Office Building; J. Wells Jones and Miss Ann Baur (C), Tariff Commission; Charles Castello, National Park Service; Miss Helen M. Smith and Miss Barbara Hull, Library of Congress.

Miss Ruth Lacklen, Senate Office Building, who is vice president of the Montana State Society, will be in the receiving line at the society's reception and dinner dance tonight at Hotel Roosevelt. Spinal Meningitis Takes Second Life

Transient Lodges Still Kept Under Quarantine.

The spinal meningitis outbreak among District transients claimed its second life yesterday when William Manning, 46, of Baltimore, died in Gallinger Hospital.

He was taken there Monday from the transient relief lodge in the 300 block of Third street.

There have been no new cases within the past 24 hours, Richard Gebhardt, transient director, said last night.

He added the following lodges are still under quarantine: 200 block of Express court, Logan circle, Eckington place, at Q street; 300 block of Third street, 2000 block of Georgia avenue, 300 block of Bryant street and the transient infirmary in the 500 block of Fifth street.

Quarantine will not be lifted from these transient lodges until it is felt certain no new cases will develop, the Health Department announced.

Transient Bureau officials reported that 750 men now are subject to the quarantine ordered by the Health Department.

A Transient Bureau lodger, Frank Murphy, accused of violating the quarantine, was sent to jail for 60 days by Police Judge John P. McMahon yesterday.

Jury Picked to Weigh Chicago Murder Case

Chicago, Feb. 15 (AP).—A jury qualified to administer the death penalty was completed today for the trial of Irving Weitzman, South Side bakery magnate, charged with the murder of Eli Daiches.

The State accused the defendant of hiring two gunmen to slay Daiches, advertising executive, as he was driven along a busy boulevard last March 3. The $300,000 in insurance policies carried by the victim and naming as beneficiary the Thomas Bowers Advertising Co., headed by the defendant's brother, Louis Weitzman, of New York, formed the motive for the plot, prosecutors contended.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

"BELIEVING that too many of the daily radio programs are devoid of educational value and lack recreational merit, the Lyon Park Citizens Association favors a higher standard of excellence than is represented by the present daily broadcasts, taken as a whole."

That's the way the resolution begins. Further, it says the association recognizes the quality of some musical and educational radio features, and wholesomeness of the recreational ones. "We regret, however, that so large a part of each day's broadcast consists of trivialities, sensational occurrences, criminal activities, misleading advertisements of harmful and foolish products, and other selfish propaganda."

So much for their complaints. The rest of the resolution explains what these citizens propose to do about it, namely, write to local offices of broadcasting companies and newspapers.

This resolution proves one thing, that listeners are not entirely passive, that one group has taken the trouble to analyze and express their objections to radio. Will other associations follow suit?

A new series of good-will programs begins today. They'll come twice a month from Italy on NBC-WJV network. Today, WMAL, 6 p. m., you'll hear Count Galeazzo Ciano, head of the Italian Ministry of Public Relations and son-in-law of Mussolini, on "Radio as an Instrument of International Understanding."

Beniamino Gigli, tenor, is scheduled to sing; the Royal Carabinier Band will present several numbers.

Speeches:

Senator Hamilton Lewis, WJSV, 1:50 p. m., "Our National Perspective."

Representative William M. Coleman, WJSV, 7:45 p. m.

Jack Dempsey is heard on Thornton Fisher's program, WRC, 6:45 p. m.

A debate between Columbia University and University of California goes on WJSV at 5:30 p. m. "Resolved: That the United States Continue Its Policy of Economic Nationalism as a Long-Range Program."

Rabbi Edward L. Isreal and Dr. Willard Thorpe speak on religion and social reconstruction, WOL, 9:30 p. m.

M. F. Ahern, athletic director, is heard on the Kansas State Founders Day program, WMAL, 8:30 p. m.

Dorothy Seegar (Mrs. Paul Hatch) is heard with the Army Band today, WMAL, 12:30. She's a Washington singer, and many friends will be anxious to tune in.

BEST bets:

Richard Bonelli, WJSV, 9 p. m. . . . Roxy pays tribute to Cole Porter, 8 p. m. WJSV . . . New children's serial begins today, 2:30 p. m., WJSV, "Mickey of the Circus" . . . Pro Arte Quartet in the Beethoven Cycle, WJSV, 4:15 p. m.

A new series starring Ruth Etting on WMAL, 11:45 a. m. today. International Week-end, as the series are called, will bring various entertainment features to day-time listeners and will be broadcast over stations in England. Featured with Miss Etting are Frank Black's Orchestra and the Modern Choir.

Radio City Party, WMAL, 9 p. m., has Jane Froman as its guest of honor.

Two musical high spots—Lawrence Tibbett in "Simon Boccanegra," WMAL, WRC, 1:55 p. m., and the Philharmonic's children's concert. The latter's program, directed by Ernest Schelling: Minuet from Haydn's Military Symphony; Mozart's "German Dances," Scherzo from Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony, selections by Schelling, Berlioz, Hadley and Dukas.

WOL's anticrime series offers its second thriller today. It's the inside story of Chicago's Reign of Terror. At 8:30 p. m.

Maybe we're squeamish, but why are some radio programs so morbid?

A surprise program, "What Would You Do," goes on WJSV at 10:30 p. m. It begins a series, to be heard each Saturday night at the same time and station.

The programs are all serious in nature, presenting a strong emotional problem, ending abruptly before a decision is reached. You'll be told, however, at the end of the act, how you can learn the sequel.
